ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1941-42.

PART I—ADMINISTRATIVE.

Staff. Dr. M. H. Krishna, M.A., D LIT. (Lond.), continued as Director of Archæological Researches in addition to his duties as Professor of History in the University Mr R. Rama Rao, B.A., Assistant to the Director, went on leave for one month and 18 days During this period Mr. L. Narasimhachar, M.A., Technical Assistant, acted as Assistant to the Director and Mr R Chakravarti as Technical Assistant

The place of Architectural Assistant remained vacant this year also; proposals to fill up the post are, however, before Government.

Mr. S. Krishnaswamy Sastry, the senior Pandit of the Department, passed away on 26th February 1942. He had served in the department for 15 years. In his place Mr. M. Hanumantha Rao, M.A., has been appointed as Pandit on probation for one year

Tours: Exploration. In connection with the study and inspection of the ancient monuments and sites in the State and for the collection of inscriptions, tours were undertaken in parts of the Mysore, Hassan, Bangalore and Chitaldrug districts by the Director and in parts of the Mysore, Hassan, Kadur, Shimoga and Chitaldrug districts by the Technical Assistant The Assistant to the Director toured in the Shimoga and Chitaldrug districts for the collection of inscriptions. For comparing with the originals and collecting the estampages of the Tamil and other inscriptions in connection with the printing of the supplementary volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica for the Bangalore, Tumkur and Kolar districts, tours were undertaken by Mr R Chakravarti and the Tamil Pandit Mr Balasubrahmanyam, B.A., who was appointed temporarily for a period of six months from 1st September 1941

Interesting sculptures, some of them important iconographically, were discovered during the year at Pālya in the Hāssan taluk, Hiremagalūr in the Chikmagalūr taluk, and Bramhasamudra in the Kadur taluk. The earliest monuments studied

Twenty coins were acquired for the office Museum (For their details please see part IV of the Report). The Śātavāhana coins discovered at the Chandravalli excavations were further studied. A draft catalogue has been prepared and is being revised for publication. Several coins received from private parties were examined and returned.

Two interesting manuscripts obtained for study are the "Kodagu dēśada janangala charitre" and the "History of the Kalale chiefs who were Dalvoys at the Mysore Royal Court." The latter is reviewed in part V of the present Report.

The acquisition of some coins has already been mentioned. About 66 ornamental metallic objects discovered during the year in the roof of

Library.

About 36 new books were added to the Office Library.

In connection with the Mysore Session of the Indian Historical Records Commission, an exhibition of manuscripts, etc., was arranged at the Jaganmohan Palace, Mysore. The exhibition was well attended by visitors and the exhibits were much appreciated. The Director was the Local Secretary of the Records Commission and almost all the members of the staff worked in various capacities for the success of the session.

The Annual Report for 1940 was published and that for 1941 printed and submitted. The work of publishing the supplementary volumes to the Epigraphia Carnatica of Bangalore, Tumkū and Kōlār was pushed through. The texts and translations of the inscriptions in Shimoga and Kōlār were copied and sent to the press. Thus the texts and translations of all the inscriptions in the supplementary volumes have been either sent to the press or have been printed.

Volumes II, III and IV of the work on Architecture in Mysore which have already been written out are being made ready for the press. The Chandravalli excavation monograph work was also taken on hand. The antiquities were arranged according to dates and levels, and the catalogues were checked and prepared for publication. A catalogue of the coins has also been prepared and is being revised for publication.

The receipts and expenditure of the Department under the budget heads amounted to Rs. 17,853-3-3 and Rs. 17,853-3-3 respectively.

Finances

A sum of Rs. 267-10-0 was realised by the sale of the departmental publications and photographs during the year.

The success of the work of the Department was rendered possible by the sincere co-operation of the members of the office staff.

during the year belong to about the 10th century A.D. At Āsandi in the Kadūr district vigorously sculptured railings reminding us of Badami and Ellora work were discovered. These railings belong in all probability to circa 900 A.D. In the village of Gaṇṇi in the Kadūr taluk there is a small Īśvara temple containing in its navaranga several pillars whose bases are carved with minutely worked but modestly ornamented figures of gods in the Chōla style like those met with at Haḷe-Ālūr in the Chāmarājanagaḷ taluk.

Excavation work was conducted during the year at Brahmagiri near Siddāpūr in the Molakālmuru taluk. The results have been very encouraging and confirm the conclusions arrived at during the previous excavations on the site. A noteworthy feature of this year's excavation at the place is that three coins—one of the Bijapur days, another of the Chālukya period and the third of about the early Śātavāhana period—were discovered during the course of digging. The discovery of the early Śātavāhana coin particularly is interesting since, in Brahmagiri, no coins had been found so far while digging. All the three coins help us in dating the levels and the antiquities. The work carried out this year may be said to be complete so far as it goes since we have been able to reach in one excavation virgin soil at a depth of sixteen feet below the surface. More information regarding the evolution of pottery and the neolithic and microlithic periods has been collected and more than 3,000 antiquities were unearthed and brought over to Mysore for study.

Notes of periodical inspection of the ancient monuments carried out during the year were submitted. In connection with the conservation of the Gōmata colossus at Sravanabelgola the Special Committee met and experiments are being conducted. Estimates for repairs to the several ancient monuments in the State were, as usual, scrutinised and returned either with countersignature or for revision from time to time.

A statue of His late Highness Sri Kṛṣṇaraja Wadiyar IV is now being prepared at the Chamarajendra Technical Institute, Mysore, for being installed at the Chennakēśava temple, at Bēlūr.

About a hundred inscriptions were collected during the year. Of these, four are copper plate records and the rest lithic ones. Among the copper plate records, three are of the Ganga period. Of the stone records, the earliest in date is an inscription of the time of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Gōvinda Prabhūtavārsha. On the 'Yūpastambha' at Huemagalūr an inscription of about the 10th century A.D. was discovered.

In connection with the Bangalore Supplement to the Epigraphia Carnatica, the texts of the Tamil inscriptions were compared, copied and forwarded to the press for being set in type.

PART II—CONSERVATION.

MYSORE DISTRICT.

Somanathapur.

PAÑCHALINGĒŚVARA TEMPLE

1 Only three of the original five towers of the temple are remaining at present. Even these are in a dilapidated condition. Unless steps are taken early to conserve them, they may collapse before long. They are intact on the west side; but on the east side they need general repairs, suitable stone props being given at necessary places to hold in position such of the stones as are in danger of coming down. The outer faces on the east side of the towers should then be plastered over so as to match the greyish granite out of which the temple is built. The facades should be ornamented like the rest of the towers and the design in this respect may be obtained from the Government Architect.

2 The brick superstructures above the long mantapa may be removed and a new water-proof light concrete roof may be constructed.

3 The broken beams of the mantapa may be held in position by giving stone props shaped like the other pillars in the mantapa.

4 The flooring of the mantapa may be made even with the level of the stone of the ankanas in front of the shrines and a cement flooring coloured to match granite stone may be provided.

5 The inscription stone may be set up in an upright position in the south-east corner of the temple. Perhaps it may be possible to discover its base by a little excavation in the spot where the inscription stone is lying.

6 The platform around the building may be levelled, its stone revetment and steps reset and the whole thing covered over with cement concrete as in the mantapa.

7 The five linga pedestals may be set up in their original places.

8 Size stone should be avoided as far as possible, during the renovation of the temple. It is desirable that only the original blocks should be used.

KĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

(I CLASS).

This temple was last inspected by the Director in 1932 and a conservation report was submitted. Subsequently rumour reached the Archaeological Department that conservation work in the temple had been undertaken by the Public Works Department. The Director of Archaeological Researches wrote to the Executive

Engineer asking for full information about the renovation of this temple, if any. The Executive Engineer replied that no such renovation was being done

The temple was inspected by the Director on 15-7-1941 and it was learnt that renovation work has been going on for more than three years since which time a number of stone and brick masons have been employed permanently for carrying on renovation, the employees at present being Siddiah, stone mason, Chinnasami, cement mason, and Raju, his boy

A fundamental point noted in this connection is that these works appear to be carried out without any knowledge of the Archaeological Department or any intimation thereto. Government Order No. D. 12944-57/Um. 25-29-4, dated the 22nd May 1930, requires that the approval and countersignature of the Archaeological Department are necessary for any repairs to be done for any building mentioned in the list of Ancient Monuments. The Sōmanāthapur temple is a First Class Monument and one of the most important architectural buildings in the State. It is not clear under what circumstances the estimate for its repairs was approved without the Archaeological Department being consulted in the matter.

As for the work that is actually being done, a part of it is acceptable to the Archaeological Department. The white cement used for pointing the floor of the quadrangle is being substituted by coloured cement. Wherever pointing is done it should not be visible or prominent. The sculptures inside and outside the temple are being cleaned of their soot coating. A rest-house for visitors is being constructed outside the north-west corner of the temple. These items are welcome.

But there are some other items of work which are archaeologically unsound. In the sculptured friezes of the temple the damaged and worn out portions have been removed by cutting them out. Imitation sculptures made by untrained modern stone masons are being introduced in the cut out places. This has often been called by scientific conservators archaeological forgery. This should be practised to an exceedingly limited extent to prevent danger to a building. But when sculptures carved by people who do not know the elements of that art and who cannot differentiate between the forehead of an elephant and that of a mouse are accepted for insertion into an ancient building, the world of archaeologists would condemn the action taken.

The inner flooring of the temple had a little unevenness which is now attempted to be removed by a chiselling process which appears to be glaringly modern and absolutely out of place in the floor of the old temple.

Something worse has been done about the sculptured images. The sculptured images of gods which had been kept around the temple have been removed to new places and repaired in awful ways. Two of these have now been set up as dvārapālas for the new doorway with their damaged faces newly lifted and provided with platyrhine noses, and holding symbols whose claims to their places are highly doubtful.

The chiselled slabs of the hall may be roughly planed so as not to appear jarringly as they do now, they should not be polished

The supply of electric lighting to the temple may be hastened

For the main cell, the Kēśava image of the Tumbadēyanahalli coffee estate near Arehalli of Bēlūr taluk may be brought and installed for worship and the temple may be thrown open to all classes of worshippers

HASSAN DISTRICT.

Palya

JANĀRDANA TEMPLE

Since the main image of the temple is peculiar and goes back to about the 11th century A D, the monument may be preserved under class III. The temple is reported to have a sum of Rs 4,000 at its credit in the shape of State Loan bonds. Some minor repairs may be caused to be effected, particularly regarding the roof and flooring of the temple. The garbhagriha and some of the piākāra shrines are said to be leaky. The vegetation growing on the walls, the roof and in the surroundings may be cleared. The steps against the north wall of the temple may be removed so that the wall details may be opened to view. The ventilators in the central ankana of the temple require wire-netting. The shrine against the south outer wall of the navaranga may be removed since it does not belong to the original structure and is ugly.

Hirekadalur

CHENNAKĒŚAVA TEMPLE

This is an ornate structure of the Hoysala period containing several finely carved architectural members. But it is very much dilapidated and cannot perhaps be repaired without very heavy cost. The surroundings are in a bad state owing to misuse by the villagers. The carved stones and pillars may, if necessary, be utilised elsewhere or preserved in a safe place. The Kēśava image which is at present lying in the navaranga of the Īśvara temple may be removed to a place of worship or preserved without damage in a museum.

Hariharapura

HARIHARA TEMPLE

The images of all the three cells of the temple are now missing. It is reported that at least two of them were shipped to Denmark long ago. In the northern niche

In the main garbhagriha, in the place of the lost Kēśava image, an entirely different form of Vishnu has been installed. Worst of all is an attempt to repair the broken flute of the Vēnugōpāla image. A new piece has been mounted by sinearing cement on the lower part of the beautiful face of Vēnugōpāla which is one of the finest pieces of sculpture in the Mysore State. Cultured visitors from distant lands who have seen these renovations could not help feeling that the Mysore authorities have been permitting repairs of a most unarchæological character.

At a short distance around the temple a new source of danger has been observed. The maidan inside the fort, which had been partly under dry cultivation and partly a meadow, has been during the last four or five years converted into wet land and the water is no doubt percolating underneath the temple. This may be expected in course of time to soften the whole ground on which the temple stands and to lead to its collapse ultimately. Its dire effects are already to be seen in the damage that can easily be observed in the outer prākāra wall of the temple, particularly on the north side. Wet cultivation in the fort area should be immediately stopped and, as soon as possible, this area should be converted into an open meadow from which rain water would be naturally drained off.

The Kēśava temple at Sōmanāthapur is a First Class Ancient Monument and deserves to be conserved and kept up in a very good condition.

The temple was again inspected on 24-3-1942. No subsequent communication in reply to the conservation note of the Director submitted during July 1941, was received from the P.W.D. Thus the monument was reinspected. The Director was glad to note that the work of tampering with the sculptures has been stopped, though the ugly cuttings made in the sculptured friezes are yet remaining. But since then all work has been stopped except that of completing the T.B. The following pieces of work may be taken up and continued to completion —

1. Substituting the white cement pointing of the courtyard with coloured material.
2. The completion of the T.B. and the construction of the kitchen, etc., block.
3. Mortar grouting the cracks in the outer walls all round and pointing.
4. Preventing the leakages in the roofs.

The worst piece of work done since the last inspection has been the removal of the flute of Vēnugōpāla in doing which his beautifully rounded chin has been chiselled away by untrained hands. The figure should not be touched any more without guidance from the Archæological Department. The latter should supervise the proper treatment of the figure.

The cultivation of the lands inside the fort should be stopped at once, otherwise the temple may collapse in course of time.

of the navaranga was enshrined a beautiful image of Lakshmī-Narasimha. As it was mutilated, the villagers have removed it to about a furlong away to the east of the temple. The image is now lying uncared for under a tree. It is fully deserving of preservation in a museum. For the time being, it may be preserved in the navaranga of the temple.

The temple itself is almost intact and requires only some minor repairs. The vegetation growing above the structure may be cleared. The walls and ceilings require mortar pointing at several places. The flooring may be made even. The surroundings require to be kept neat and tidy, cultivation of the land in the immediate vicinity being prohibited.

Heragu

(II CLASS)

This temple has been recently renovated and a compound wall is being constructed. The institution has about Rs 400 at its credit, which may well be utilised for repairing the porch.

Mudigere

YŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE

(Proposed for inclusion in the second class)

Though the temple is intact, it requires some minor repairs. The plants and trees growing near the outer walls should all be cut down and the circumambulatory passage cleaned of its dirt. Whitewashing in any part of the temple should be forbidden and the thick coat of chunam on the walls, etc., should be slowly and carefully scraped off without damaging the stone.

Koravangala

BŪCHĒŚVARA (I CLASS) AND OTHER TEMPLES.

The improvements suggested in respect of the Būchēśvara and other temples in the Mysore Archæological Report for 1933, have not yet been carried out. The suggested improvements are as follows —

1. The houses on the south of the Būchēśvara temple should be acquired and the compound extended, with a gateway from the east or south-east leading directly from the road.
2. The railing stones of the temple which are lying about near the tank and elsewhere may be restored to their original position.

- 3 The village panchayet may be encouraged to lay out a park in the grounds between the Būchēśvara and the Nāgēśvara temples to the east of the tank and the cart-track connecting with the high road may be improved and made useful for cars
- 4 The pond to the north-east of the Gōvindēśvara temple which appears to be the only source for the supply of drinking water to the village, may be rebuilt with the old stones lying about
- 5 The sculptured pieces thrown about in various parts of the village may be collected and stored in the compound of the Būchēśvara temple.

Anugavalli

RĀMA TEMPLE

This temple is sufficiently intact and not archæologically important, though old. It would be enough if the villagers are encouraged to maintain the institution in its present state

Honnavaṛa.

(III CLASS).

This is an ancient monument of the third class, having some beautiful ceilings and figure sculptures. Though it is intact, it appears to be of late neglected so that vegetation has been growing on it in several places. The southern walls seem to be out of plumb here and there and require to be examined early and reset. It is said that the ceiling of the garbhagriha is leaky in one or two places. The leaky portions require to be properly pointed with mortar. The garbhagriha doorway which is a well-carved piece should be cleaned of its thick coat of chunam slowly and carefully. The stones of the walls require mortar-pointing here and there.

Adagur

TEMPLES NEAR THE TANK OF THE VILLAGE

It is impossible to conserve these temples without very heavy cost, since they are much dilapidated. The surrounding jungle growth may, however, be cut down and the temples preserved from further destruction.

LAKṢMĪNĀRĀYANA TEMPLE

The temple is sufficiently intact but requires to be made neat and tidy so far as its surroundings are concerned. At the time of inspection the circumambulatory passage outside had been overgrown with vegetation. The passage requires to be mal even and cement-pointed. A compound wall may perhaps be constructed when funds permit and the surrounding ground may be levelled properly.

Gonisomenahalli

SIVA TEMPLE

The Siva temple at this village is a small structure of no architectural merit. But inside its navaranga there are three exquisitely carved images which deserve to be protected. For the sake of these images it is recommended that the villagers may be encouraged to preserve the temple by executing some minor repairs. Some slabs of the walls which are out of plumb may be reset and the roof made water-proof. The flooring requires to be made even. A wooden door for the navaranga seems to be necessary. The aichak may be encouraged to take care of the images.

VIRABHADRA TEMPLE

(II CLASS)

Though the Virabhadra temple is intact, its surroundings need to be cleared of vegetation and made neat and tidy. On the roof of the mukhamantapa a pipul plant is growing. It should be cut down immediately. The outer walls seem to be bulging outwards in one or two places on the south and north. They may be examined. The pond immediately to the south-east of the temple may either be railed off for protection or, better still, filled up since it is not serving any useful purpose. The wall sculptures are being damaged by mischief-mongers. They may be prevented from doing so by the setting up of an Ancient Monument board. The ground around the basement of the temple may be excavated so that the basement details may be opened to view.

OTHER MONUMENTS

It is of course necessary to reserve the palace site for future excavation by the department. But in the meanwhile it is desirable to include the site in the list of Ancient Monuments. It may be declared 'Protected' and put under Class III.

A few yards from the T. B. there are five mounds which mark the sites of five ornate structures of the Hoysala period. From the details of the basement friezes depicting mythological stories, etc., and the exquisitely carved sculptures representing Lakshminārāyaṇa and other gods, it is gathered that the temples, though small in size, were yet as beautiful as the Kēdārēśvara and Hoysaleswara temples at the place. It seems desirable that these sculptures and friezes should be preserved and no longer be allowed to be neglected and mutilated.

(1) It is therefore suggested that the mounds may be included in the list of protected Ancient Monuments of Class III and, by degrees, be cleared so that the friezes may be laid bare to view

(2) The sculptures may be set up within the area in an upright position.

(3) The vegetation around may be cut down and the premises made neat and tidy.

(4) If possible, the entire group of these temples may be enclosed in a compound which may be secured by a lockable gateway

(5) An approach road from the T.B. may also be made since the spot is very near the T.B.

For the time being, it may not be possible to find funds for all these items. The work may be spread over a few years and each year one of the mounds may be cleared and the sculptures, etc., preserved. The cost on this account may not come to more than Rs 300 for each mound. But it is very necessary that an Archæological officer should be present during the execution of the work

KADUR DISTRICT.

Hiremagalur

KŌDANDA-RĀMA TEMPLE.

The Kōdandarāma temple is a major Muzrai institution and is well kept. But the outer walls of the garbhagriha and sukhanāsi are a little out of plumb in a few places. On the west just below the eaves a crack has sprung up owing perhaps to the heavy weight above. It may be considered if the weight cannot be lessened. The joints of the wall slabs require mortar pointing. There are two rooms on either side of the sukhanāsi inside the temple. To let in more light, the ceiling may be opened and ventilators provided. Immediate attention is however necessary in the case of the west outer wall of the garbhagriha since it is in danger of collapsing. The roof of the rangamantapa is reported to be leaky in several places. This may be looked into.

Brahmasamudra

NĀRĀYANA TEMPLE.

The Nārāyana temple at Brahmasamudra is intact. But of late it is much neglected and the surroundings require to be made neat and tidy. The dvārapāla figures in front of a house to the south of the village deserve to be preserved in a museum.

TangaliĪSVARA TEMPLE.

The Īsvara temple is the oldest monument in the village and hails from about the 12th century. Though it is not an ornate structure, the villagers may be encouraged to effect some minor repairs to the temple. The leaky portions of the roof may be caused to be repaired and the surroundings of the temple cleared of debris and vegetation.

MacheriYŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE

In such an insignificant place as Macheri which consists of just seven or eight houses there exists an architectural monument, that is the Yōgā-Narasimha temple, which is about a thousand years old and as such worthy of preservation from further destruction. The original structure consisting of the garbhagriha and its front mantapa is however intact, though the outer walls of the garbhagriha have disappeared. These outer walls may be rebuilt and worship restored, if possible, since the main image of Narasimha is well preserved excepting only for a small cut in the left hand which may be filled up with suitably coloured wax. The front kaisāle which is beyond repairs may be dismantled and the front mukhamantapa opened out. The flooring of the mantapa and garbhagriha may also be improved.

YellambalasiKĒSAVA TEMPLE

Since the sculptures inside this temple are all good works of art and since the temple is a muzrai institution, some initial repairs may be effected. Some of the collapsed and out-of-plumb slabs of the walls require to be reset. General repairs seem necessary in the case of the ceilings and surroundings of the temple.

GarjiĪSVARA TEMPLE.

An extra-ordinary interest attaches to the relievo sculptures on the navaranga pillars of the temple. In their general features the sculptures resemble those at Hale-Ālūr in the Chāmarājanagar taluk of the Mysore district and may well be attributed to the Chōla times typologically. It is therefore recommended that the temple may be included in class III of the conservation list and the villagers may be encouraged to put up a compound wall. Whitewashing in the interior of the temple should be strictly forbidden and the existing coating of chunam on the walls and pillars should be slowly and carefully scraped off without damage to the stones.

Yagati.

VĪRANĀRAYANA TEMPLE

The villagers are keen on the repairs of the Viranārāyana temple which hails from about the 14th century A D With the co-operation of the villagers and some contribution from them, it might be possible to restore the temple and preserve it from further destruction The slabs of the outer walls are out of plumb in many places and the roof is leaky throughout the navaranga These require immediate attention

Mudigere

ĪŚVARA TEMPLE

The image of Bhairava in this temple is a good Hoysala piece. Since, however, it is mutilated, it is not being worshipped Perhaps in due course it may be removed to a museum Cooking inside the temple should strictly be forbidden. At the time of inspection the premises had been occupied by a barber who was using the navaranga of the temple as his kitchen and dwelling place

The temple is worthy of being declared as a muziai institution and being restored, as far as possible, for the sake of the well-carved sculptures inside it

Asandi

GANGĒŚVARA AND BRAHMĒŚVARA TEMPLES

These temples are structures of the twelfth century having graceful appearance and are almost intact. A few minor repairs to the outer walls here and there and coloured mortar-pointing in a few places in the roof is all that is necessary for the time being.

VĪRABHADRA TEMPLE

This temple is a good monument deserving of preservation in the second class. The railings in front of the porch of the temple are unique specimens in the Mysore State assignable to circa 900 A D They should at all costs be protected from damage The temple itself is intact, but there is so much of white-washing on the outer walls and inside the temple that all sculptural details have become quite hidden The thick coat of chunam should slowly and carefully be scraped off without damage to the stones

AmritapuraAMRITĒSVARA TEMPLE*(FIRST CLASS)

The Amritēsvara temple at Amritāpura is a first class ancient monument. Several conservation proposals have been made in the past by the department, but none of them has been given effect to. Owing to the extraordinary interest attached to the ceilings and wall details of the temple, it is highly desirable that early steps should be taken to conserve the monument properly.

The slabs of the eaves of the mukhamantapa have collapsed in a few places and ugly props have been given at the corners to support the eaves. The fallen slabs may be replaced and the eaves generally repaired so as to do away with the props, if possible. It is reported that in a few places in the garbhagriha, sukhanāsi and the navaranga the roof is leaky. Some of the beams of the mukhamantapa have developed cracks, they may be held in position by suitable means. The introduction of 'L' shaped iron bands may be considered. The tower above the garbhagriha has developed a wide crack near the kalaśa. It may be examined and pointed with mortar suitably coloured. The sculptural details of the tower are covered by plaster which may be slowly and carefully removed without damage to the stone. A store room may be provided in the temple premises for storing the things belonging to the temple. At present they are stored in the navaranga, which is not advisable. It may be considered if it is not possible to repair the Virabhadra shrine to the south of the temple and convert it into a store room. The larger trees growing in the temple compound should all be cut down. The flooring inside the prākāra may be paved with available stones. The compound wall of the temple requires general repairs.

ShingapuraYŌGĀ-NARASIMHASVĀMI TEMPLE.

Shingapura is a 'bechirak' village situated near Sōmpura. A new hamlet has sprung up at a distance of about a mile to the south-east of the temple. But none of the inhabitants of this new hamlet seems interested in the temple. During the rainy season the floods of the river Tungā which flows just behind the temple rise high, and water is reported to stagnate within the temple to a depth of about three feet. Thus there appears to be no use in recommending the restoration of the temple.

The images of Yōgānarasimha and Ugranarasimha, however, are good works of about the fourteenth century. The temple itself is not ornamental, though it is surmounted by a stone bulbous dome over a square-shaped stepped pyramidal tower.

The porch and the mukhamantapa have completely disappeared. The mahādvāra is ruined and the outer walls of the temple are overgrown with vegetation, etc. It would cost nothing less than Rs 5,000 to repair the temple.

Since the villagers of Sōmpura are not also interested in the monument, the images may in due course be removed either to a museum or to some other temple elsewhere. The neighbouring villagers do not want them.

SHIMOGA DISTRICT.

CHENNAGIRI—HILL FORT (III CLASS)

The hill fort at Chennagiri is a third class ancient monument. Some repairs have been effected near the entrance and the growth of lantana and grass has been checked by recent burning. But there are many trees and plants growing right on the fort walls themselves which have rendered the slabs out of plumb. These trees require to be cut down early.

KĒTĒSVARA TEMPLE.

None of the conservation measures recommended in M.A.R. 1937, page 55, has been given effect to with regard to this monument. The temple is a neat small structure deserving of being preserved from further ruin. It will not cost much to remove the vegetation growing on the roof. The joints of the wall slabs may be pointed with coloured mortar and the collapsed slabs on the northern side of the temple may be replaced. The roof requires to be made water-proof. The villagers may be encouraged to effect these minor repairs, since the temple is not included in the list of Ancient Monuments.

REPAIRS AND MAINTENANCE OF MONUMENTS

(BASED ON THE REPORTS OF THE REVENUE SUB-DIVISION OFFICERS).

The annual reports in connection with the repairs and maintenance of the Ancient Monuments in the State have been received only from Tumkur, Kadur and Hassan districts. The Sub-Division Officers of the other districts have not so far forwarded their reports so that they could not be included here.

TUMKUR DISTRICT.

TURUVKERE TALUK.

The Chennakēsava temple at Tandaga and the Kallēsvara temple at Hulikal are both stated to be in good condition. The Nandi in front of Gangādhārēsvara, the Chennigarāya temple and the Śankarēsvara temple at Turuvekere are also stated to be in good condition. The Chennakēsava temple at Nāgalāpura is reported to be in need of repairs. The Kēdārēsvara temple at the place is reported to be in good condition.

CHIKKANAYAKANAHALLI TALUK

The Yōgamādhava temple at Śettikere and the Mallēsvara temple at Huliyaṛ are both stated to be in good condition

TIPTUR TALUK

The Chennigarāya temple at Aralaguppe is in a good state. But some of the pillars and wall slabs of the Narasiṃha temple at Vighnasante are said to be bulging out and requiring repairs.

MADHUGIRI SUB-DIVISION

SIRA TALUK

The Jumma Masjid at Sira which is a first class Ancient Monument is reported to be clean and tidy. The appointment of a sweeper and the supply of lift pumps for the well are recommended by the Sub-Division Officer

The main building of the Mallik Rihan Darga at Sira which is also a first class Ancient Monument is reported to be in good condition. But its compound wall is stated to be needing repairs. A sum of Rs. 363 was sanctioned by Government for repairs. But as yet no repairs have been executed. Some monthly grants for the *dīpā-ādhan*e are recommended, since the five brothers who look after the institution by turns are stated to be not getting any remuneration except the small income derived from a private endowment consisting of two acres of wet land at Objagunte

TUMKUR SUB-DIVISION

The Lakshminarasimhasvāmī temple at Dēvarāyanadurga, which is a major muzrai institution and a second class ancient monument, is stated to be fairly well preserved. But for want of stone pavement all round, grass is said to be growing. Instructions are said to have been issued for the removal of the grass. The door at the entrance to the garbhagriha is stated to be in need of repairs. The temple has a sum of Rs 3,594-7-10 at its credit and the temple authorities are said to have been given instructions to attend to the items of repairs.

The Chennigarāya temple at Kaidāla, which is a second class ancient monument and has a sum of Rs. 1,368-15-11 at its credit, is said to be fairly well maintained so far as the inner portion is concerned. The outer gōpura is stated to be in urgent need of repairs since it may gradually collapse if neglected. The work, however, is said to be very costly. The Sub-Division Officer recommends that the gōpura deserves to be preserved in good condition.

HASSAN DISTRICT.

HASSAN SUB-DIVISION

The monuments at Hāssan, Arasikere, Hārnahalli, Jāvagal, Nuggihalli, Jinanāthapura, Śravanabelagola and Hojenarasipur have been inspected by the Sub-Division Officer.

KADUR DISTRICT.

TARIKERE SUB-DIVISION.

The Amritēśvara temple at Amritāpura was inspected by the Sub-Division Officer and the Amildar of Tarikere. No improvements by way of repairs are stated to have been effected and the question of the construction of the compound wall is said to be under correspondence.

CHIKMAGALUR SUB-DIVISION.

The Yūpastambha at Hiremagalūr, the Vīranārāyana temple at Belavādi and the Chennakēśava and Siddhēśvara temples at Marle, are all reported to be in good condition. The roof of the Mārkaṇḍēśvara temple at Khāndya is stated to be leaky.

MUDIGERE TALUK

The Jan Bastis at Angadi, the Kēśava statue in the ruined temple at the same place and the Kalasēśvara temple at Kalasa are all stated to be in good state of preservation.

PART III—STUDY OF ANCIENT MONUMENTS AND SITES. MYSORE DISTRICT.

Somanathapur.

PAÑCHALINGĒŚVARA TEMPLE

On page 39 of the Annual Report of this department for 1932, a short note on the Pañchalingēśvara temple at Sōmanāthapur has been published. The temple was constructed by Sōmanātha Dandanāyaka just before 1268 A. D and consists of five shrines which stand in a row facing east and having a long three-aisled verandah in front. Thus it is an example of a quintuple structure of the Hoysala period.

History and general description

The outer walls are raised on cubical and biscuit-shaped basement cornices and are relieved by right-angled pilasters at intervals having between them, rhomboidal flowers and padmas in low relief.

Outer view. In the middle of the walls runs an eaves-shaped cornice ornamented, here and there, by rudely-shaped kīrtimukhas in relief

The three towers that are existing at present are all uniformly shaped, being square at first, then rising in four tiers of turrets and having cornices with dentil, kīrtimukha and other mouldings which are all unworked

The pillars of the verandah are mostly cylindrical, having cubical bases. The ceilings rise on two sets of corner stones and have padmas in the centre.

Each shrine has its own vestibule with a plain doorway

HANUMĀN TEMPLE

In the village of Bīlikere close by the road side is a tiled building behind which stands a stone built temple evidently constructed in about 1842 A. D. It consists of a small hall with two stone pillars of the ordinary cubical Dravidian type bearing Kannada inscriptions of 1842 A. D (Śaka year Sobhakṛitu)

History

The north pillar bears a relievo group of Śrīnivāsa dāsa and his wife, the āsa wearing a turban. The south pillar has a relievo group of Subbarāya dāsa and his wife, the dāsa wearing a dome-shaped cap and holding a tambūra.

At the back of the building, there are three cells of which the central one contains an image of Hanumān, about three feet high, in the striking attitude (Pl II, 1). The grinning mouth and lifted hand of the god are highly expressive. On the top of the tōrana is a small image of Śrīnivāsa called Jaya-Venkatēśa.

The cells

In the north cell is a stone brindāvana, about four feet high, of fine workmanship (Pl. II, 2). It stands on a Kūrma-pītha. On the lower tier is seated Subbarāya dāsa in padmāsana as a sanyāsi with japamālā and danda. Just above him is Krishna with lifted hand. Further up is Krishna seated. On the top also is Krishna dancing (Navanīta-nṛtta) under Ananta's seven hoods and standing on his body.

HASSAN DISTRICT

Palya

A traditional account of the place and a brief description of the temples are contained in the Annual Report of this department for 1926, pp. 1-2. If, as is possible, the peculiar form of the image of Janārdana is ascribable to about the 11th century

Antiquity

A D., the village seems to be of great antiquity, though no inscription in the village would warrant such a presumption. During the 17th century, however, there was a local Pāleyagār governing the neighbourhood from his seat at Mahārājanadurga which is just at a distance of about eight miles to the south-west of the place. The Pāleyagār is said to have had his treasury here and to have fortified the place with a fort wall all round and a moat outside. All these are now in ruins and overgrown with lantana.

JANĀRDANA TEMPLE

Architecturally the structure appears to belong to more than two periods. The garbhagriha, vestibule and navaranga with an one-ankana porch in front seems to have formed the original structure which was perhaps constructed during the early part of the 14th century. To this period must also be ascribed the mahādvāra which has certain architectural similarities with the original structure, particularly in the wall pilasters and the imitation ribbed brackets. At some distance to the east of the above-mentioned one-ankana porch, there appears to have stood an open mantapa with a jagati all round and entrances on all the four sides. Perhaps during the Pāleyagār period the west entrance was removed and the space between the porch and mantapa was covered up and the north and south walls were constructed. This explains the unduly long hall of the present navaranga. Evidently during the same Pāleyagār period the prākāra walls and the minor shrines in the prākāra also were built.

The outer view of the original structure consisting, as above said, of the garbhagriha, vestibule and navaranga, is plain. The walls are relieved by long, thin and right-angled pilasters having the imitation ribbed brackets of about the 14th century.

Outer view.

Among the figure sculptures appearing on the outer walls, mention may be made of the following :—

1. Kesava with two consorts and bhakta to the right having his hands joined above his head.
- 2 Two rearing lions standing back to back.
- 3 A four-petalled padma inset in a square.

North wall of navaranga —

Similar niche in the middle with a simhalalāta above under which is seated Yōgānarasimha In a panel to the east is sculptured the Yamalārjuniya episode of the Bhāgavata

On the north outer wall of the compartment between the mukhamantapa and the navaranga is sculptured the figure of a woman in an obscene attitude

The eaves of the garbhagriha, vestibule and navaranga are sharp and relieved at intervals by kīrtimukhas There is no tower above the garbhagriha The eaves of the front mukhamantapa are long and sloping as in the Keladi type of temples. The three entrances of the mukhamantapa have each a flight of steps supported on either side by yālī railings

To the right of the eastern doorway of the mukhamantapa is a panel depicting the episode of Rāma killing the māyāmṛga The head of the māyāmṛga is severed and from the body of the deer issues forth the demon Mārīcha To the left of the māyāmṛga is the figure of a bearded hermit holding a staff in his right hand. Perhaps this represents Rāvana who is known to have appeared before Sītā disguised as a hermit. But the figure of Sītā is not carved in the panel

The central four pillars of the mukhamantapa are all worked in the same style.

Mukhamantapa

They have each a square base and a cylindrical shaft having at its bottom octagonal, sixteen-sided and circular bands which are ornamented with floral, peacock, medallion and garland designs The capitals of these pillars have the floral and tongue

ornamentations Just below the bracket, the shaft has a drum band whose outer face has been carved with floral and beaded hangings On a facade of the base of the south-east pillar is carved in high relief a dancing group consisting of two ladies playing 'kōlāta' (Pl II, 3)

The central ceiling of the mukhamantapa is raised on two sets of corner stones and has in the middle a padma pendant inset in a square band having minutely worked scroll ornamentation.

The two front pillars of the original porch in front of the navaranga are similar in character to the pillars of the mukhamantapa But their capitals are different having the imitation ribbed moulding of about the 14th century The ceiling of this porch has a boldly carved padma inset in an ornamental square.

Porch.

The two dvārapāla figures on either side of the navaranga doorway seem to belong to about the 17th century A certain Ranganna is stated in an inscription on a pavement slab to have installed them. To the right of the navaranga doorway is depicted on the wall the figure of Vyāghrapāda in the attitude of worshipping the linga. To the left of the doorway are the figures of Garuda and Hanumān on either side of a fruit, both in the striking attitude The navaranga doorway is plain having no figure sculpture either on the jambs or on the lintel

Navaranga

The four pillars in the central square of the navaranga have each a square base and a cylindrical shaft with brackets of the imitation ribbed pattern At the bottom of the shaft are carved the eight-sided, sixteen-sided and circular bands

On the architrave above the vestibule doorway is a well-carved Garuda To the right of the doorway is a bearded drummer on a pilaster and to the left is a Yaksha on another pilaster

Vestibule

The main image inside the garbhagriha is a peculiar form of Vishnu, resembling Venkatēsa, though called Janārdana in the inscriptions (Pl II, 4) The god is about 5 feet high and stands in sambhanga with abhaya, prayōga-chakra, śankha and katihasta There is no pedestal The god wears jatāma-kuta, makara-kundalas, yajñōpavīta, mauñjī, kaupīna, gracefully flowing ghantas, armlets, wristlets, anklets and necklaces Except for the kaupīna, the image is nude. Behind the head of the god is a nimbus The god wears a happy smile The facial expression is akin to the one met with in the image of Harihara at Harihar. There is no prabhāvalī behind the god and the proportions are dwarfish. The form thus depicted is said to represent all the Trīmurtis, jatā indicating Śiva, ghantā indicating Brahma and conch and discus Vishnu The dhyāna-sloka in respect of the image runs as follows —

pingachchāya jatādharāṃ katī-tatir-mauñjīdharam ghantayāḥ¹

rājam tam makarārdha-kundala-dharam bibhrānam-Indrārōhitam ||
 kaupīnam bhujagōpavitā ruchiram śankhābja-chakrāṅkitam |
 nityam Sādhu Janārdanam śubhakaram vande Trimūrtiyātmakam |

In style the image seems to belong to the 11th century. Whether there may have been an older temple for the god is a point for future investigation. The present structure, however, is of about the 14th century A D

The metallic group of images in the temple consists of Janārdana—same in form as the main image—and his two consorts

In a prākāra cell to the south of the temple are enshrined the Ālvārs and Āchāryas and a Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa group under a seven-hooded Ādisēsha. In the south-western part of the prākāra stands the shrine of the goddess enshrining a rude image of the Pālleyagār period. In a room on the right jagali is installed a rude image of Vēnugōpāla which appears to belong to the 18th century

RĀMĒŚVARA TEMPLE

The Rāmēśvara temple is situated at a little distance to the north-west of the Janārdana temple. The present structure appears to belong to the 19th century, though the Rāmēśvara linga in the main cell may perhaps be older. It consists of the main cell with an oblong mantapa in front. In the latter are found an image of Ganapati and a Haṇumān relievo in the striking attitude

TRIPURĀNTAKĒŚVARA TEMPLE

This temple is a present day country house of tiles, but enshrines a few 17th century sculptures like a Ganēśa, a bull, a linga and some nāga stones. The linga is called Tripurāntakēśvara.

JAIN BASTI.

To the south-east of the village there is a mound where a Jain Basti is said to have been standing. Some of the architectural members belonging to the building, like the capitals, pillars, beams, etc., are lying amidst a thick growth of lantana. These indicate that the Basti was built some time during the late Vijayanagar period.

Hirekadalur

This is a small village near Dudda, a railway station on the Hassan-Arsikere line. The older name of the place is Kadalūr. The place was also called Aradattipura, probably a corruption of 'Arundhatipura.' During the 12th century A D there appear to have been existing two temples at the place, one dedicated to Padmanābha or Ranganātha and the other to Chennakēśava.

Situation.

ISVARA TEMPLE

The Padmanābha temple is no longer in existence. Many of the architectural members belonging to it are said to have been utilised about twenty years ago in building the Īsvara temple, the interior view of which at present is Hoysala in character, particularly in the doorways and pillars and the central ceiling of the navaranga. The pillars are of the characteristic bell-shaped lathe-turned type. On two of the beams of the navaranga are inscribed portions of the inscription Hassan 82 which is dated in the year Rudhīrōdgāri and records a grant to Padmanābha and Chennakēśava.

Inside the navaranga of the temple is lying an old image of Chennakēśava of the Hoysala period. The image is about 5' high including its tōrana. The tōrana has been gracefully carved with pleasing details of the kīrtimukha, floral and garland designs and with the daśāvatāra representations on the piabhāvali. The god stands in samabhanga and wears the usual ornaments and attributes. But the gadā in the left lower hand is a recent substitute for the older one which is missing. The caste mark on the forehead seems to have been carved recently. The image is said to have been brought over from the neglected Chennakēśava temple which stands in a ruined condition to the west of the village.

CHEENNAKĒŚAVA TEMPLE

In its outer appearance the Chennakēśava temple presents a striking similarity to the Narasimha temple at Grāma. The outer walls are raised on a basement consisting of three cornices, the first two of which from the bottom bear uncarved dentil and cross-shaped mouldings. The walls are relieved by thin right-angled pilasters uniformly all round. In the middle of the south and north walls of the navaranga, large lotuses have been represented in relief.

The temple consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a porch and an open mukhamantapa. The tower above the garbhagriha rises in the form of a stepped pyramid whose several cornices have dentil mouldings at intervals. The stone kalaśa on the top of the tower is broken. The eaves are a little sloping with upward dentil mouldings at the corners.

The pillars of the mukhamantapa are all bell-shaped and lathe-turned. The ceiling of the porch consists of four concentric circles with a disappeared pendant in the middle. On the front faces of the corner stones are represented the eight Dīkṣālakas and the figures of marching musicians and dancers.

The navaranga doorway is supported by a well-carved Dvārapāla group

Navaranga

On the jambs of the doorway are found the usual scroll and padma ornamentations. The pilasters on either side are of the indented pattern. A well-carved Gaja-Lakshmi decorates the lintel stone. Inside the navaranga the four pillars of the central square are fine specimens of the bell-shaped kind with the padma, kīrtimukha, scroll and floral designs and minutely carved beaded hangings on their several bands. All the ceilings of the navaranga are beautifully carved with floral and figure sculptures and with medallions appearing on the flat stones in the middle. The central ceiling, however, seems to have been half-worked. A lotus pendant hangs from the middle of the central ceiling.

Main cell

The doorways of the vestibule and garbhagriha are not as elaborately carved as the navaranga doorway. The main image of the temple, as mentioned above, has been removed to the navaranga of the Īśvara temple in the village.

Chikka Kadalur.

KALLĒVARA TEMPLE

From the inscription No. 85, Hassan Taluk, it is learnt that the old name of the place was Gōvīndapura. During the time of Harihara II, the Vijayanagar king, the place was called Kadalūr and Hariharapura.

Antiquity.

About a mile to the north of the village and at the eastern end of a tank is situated the Kallēśvara temple which, according to the inscription mentioned above, was constructed in 1156 A.D.

The temple is now covered over by an earthen mound mostly. But on the south and west, the outer walls are visible to some extent.

General description

The wall pilasters are thin and right-angled. The tower and the parapet are both missing.

The navaranga doorway is plain. Inside the hall the pillars and ceilings are all rude. Only the central ceiling has a rudely carved padma. Against the walls of the navaranga are placed small sculptures representing Bhairava, Sūrya-Nārāyaṇa, nāga stones, etc. These are also rudely worked.

The vestibule doorway is plain except for the two right-angled pilasters on either side of it and an eaves-shaped cornice ornamented with dentil mouldings above the lintel. Inside the sukhanāsi there is a small rude bull which, like the sculptures in the navaranga, seems to belong to about the 17th century. The ceiling of the sukhanāsi is raised on two sets of corner stones and has a padma pendant in the middle inset in a śrīchakra. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is also raised on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the middle.

The linga inside the garbhagriha is small, being only about a foot and a half in height

NĀRĀYANA TEMPLE

Inside the village there is a modern temple constructed about four years ago on the site of an old temple of the Hoysala period and enshrining a good image of a four-handed Nārāyana holding śankha, padma, gadā and chakra (Pl III, 2) On the makarātōrana of the image are carved the ten avatāras of Vishnu The god stands in samabhanga wearing yajñōpavīta and the usual minutely carved ornaments, makara-kundalas and tiara On either side of the god stand smaller images of his consorts, while on the pedestal is the relievo figure of a kneeling Garuda

Hariharapura

HARIHARĒŚVARA TEMPLE

The village of Hariharapura is situated at a distance of about seven miles to the south-east of Dudda To the south of the village, there stands a triple-celled temple of the Hoysala period (Pl IV, 1) which originally contained in its three cells the images of Harihara (central cell), Anantapadmanābha (north cell), and Sarasvatī (south cell). All the three images are now missing and it is reported that they were shipped to Denmark long ago. On the lintel piece of the north-cell doorway is carved a beautiful figure of Anantapadmanābha (Pl V, 1)

In the navaranga of the temple there are two niches against the western wall.

The one on the south enshrined originally an image of Viṣṇnēśvara which is now missing In the north niche there was an image of Lakshmīnarasimha (M.A.R. 1925, Pl. VI, 2) which has now been shifted to about a furlong away to the east of the temple and is lying uncared for under a tree

A description of the temple is contained in M.A.R. 1925, pp 2-3 Two views of the temple are published in Pl II of that report. The ceilings of the navaranga, though ordinary in type, are yet beautifully carved. Proceeding from the east and running clockwise they are as follows —

1. Two concentric circles with a padma pendant in the middle. On the inner faces of the first circle a row of twelve turrets has been carved
- 2 Two concentric squares with a padma pendant inset in a twelve-pointed star.
- 3 A square and two concentric octagons with padma pendant in the centre
- 4 An octagon and three concentric circles with padma pendant in the centre.
- 5 A square, an octagon and a circle with padma pendant in the centre
- 6 A square and an eight-pointed star with padma pendant in the centre.

7. Two concentric circles with a padma pendant in the centre. On the inner face of the first circle is carved a row of sixteen turrets.

8. A square and three concentric octagons with a padma pendant in the middle.

9. Central ceiling—An octagon and two concentric squares with a flat ceiling. The inner faces of the octagon are carved with the figures of Dīkṣāpālas and marching warriors. The inner faces of the first square have been carved with the figures of dancers, drummers, cymbalists, pipers and peacocks. The inner faces of the second square have been carved with petals. The flat ceiling is divided into nine panels with Tāṇḍavēśvara in the central panel and the Dīkṣāpālas in the surrounding panels.

Heragu.

The village Heragu lies at a distance of about five miles to the south-east of Dudda. It contains a ruined Basti, a small Kamathēśvara shrine and a Kīrti-nārāyaṇa temple—all belonging to the Hoysala period in style and workmanship.

BASTI.

The basti resembles in its plan of construction the Ādinātha Basti at Chikka

Hanasōge and consists of three cells leading into a common navaranga. The structure seems to have gone into ruins even during the 17th century when the fort walls at the place were constructed. One of the walls has been built right on the top of the Basti.

The outer walls of the basti have been raised on a basement consisting of five plain cornices. The walls are relieved by thin right-angled pilasters at intervals. There appears to have stood a porch in front of the navaranga. The porch has now disappeared.

The images of the Tirthankaras which were originally enshrined in the cells are now missing. The pillars and pilasters in the temple are either bell-shaped or indented.

KAMATHĒŚVARA SHRINE.

The Kamathēśvara shrine consists of a small garbhagṛha, a sukhanāsi, a navaranga and a porch. The outer walls have the usual right-angled pilasters. The tower above the garbhagṛha is of brick and mortar and belongs to about the 17th century. The two front pillars of the porch are cylindrical in shape.

The navaranga doorway which has a seated Jina image on the lintel piece seems to have been brought over here from the basti mentioned above. The pillars inside the navaranga seem to be modern and suggest a recent renovation of the temple.

Architecturally the building is unimportant.

KĪRTINĀRĀYANA TEMPLE

The temple of Kīrtinārāyana standing a few yards to the north of the Isvara temple has been described in M.A.R. 1925. It is not so architecturally important as to deserve more detailed description here.

Mudigere.

Mudigere lies at a distance of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles directly to the north north-east of Dudda. The place was visited once in 1920 and again in 1924. It appears to have been an ancient agrahāra town containing two principal temples—one dedicated to Yōgānarasimha and the other to Śiva called Eragēśvara.

The latter temple which stood at a distance of about a hundred yards to the north-east of the former has completely disappeared now excepting only for the main linga, the garbhagriha doorway and the bull. From the inscription No. 69, Hāssan taluk, it is learnt that the temple was constructed in 1156 A.D. during the time of Narasimha I, the Hoysala king.

Eragēśvara.

YŌGĀNARASIMHA TEMPLE

It is very probable that the Yōgānarasimha temple was also constructed at the same time as the Eragēśvara temple. In its style of workmanship it is almost similar to the Narasimha temple at Śāntigrāma. It is a homogeneous structure consisting of a garbhagriha, a vestibule, a navaranga and a porch with a kaisāle all round (Pl. IV, 2). The last has in several places disappeared now; but the outer walls remain serving as a compound. On the east side the dilapidated portion has recently been renovated in brick and mortar.

Description.

The outer walls of the temple which are relieved by thin right-angled pilasters at intervals have been raised on a basement consisting of five cornices of which the second and third from the bottom have dentil mouldings. The eaves are straight and short and have also dentil mouldings at intervals. The tower is in the form of a stepped pyramid with its cornices decorated by dentil mouldings once again and its top surmounted by a stone kalasa. On the east side, it has a projection over the vestibule.

Outer view.

The two front pillars of the porch are bell-shaped. On either side of the navaranga doorway there are indented pilasters and two Vaishnava dvārapālas. The details of the jambs are not visible owing to a thick coat of chunām on them. Above the plain pediment there is an eaves-shaped cornice bearing a row of Dravidian turrets The porch ceiling consists of an octagon and a square with a flat stone above divided into nine panels by bands, the panels bearing padma medallions .

Inside the navaranga the ceilings are deep Proceeding from the east and running clockwise they are as follows —

Ceilings.

1. Two sets of corner stones with a padma inset in an eight-pointed star, the star itself being inset in a square.

2 to 8. Two sets of corner stones with a multipetalled low padma pendant in the centre.

9 (Central) Two concentric octagons with a graceful dome rising in the middle of the ceiling The inner face of the second octagon is carved with a row of turret-bearing niches enshrining four-petalled flowers The surface of the dome has rafters at intervals secured by three concentric octagonal bands ornamented with gracefully hanging lotus pendants In the middle of the ceiling, there was originally a large padma pendant which is broken now

The corner stones of all the ceilings have the representation of kirtimukhas on their undersurface. Their inner faces are carved with beaded hangings, rhomboidal flowers between columns and other designs The undersurfaces of the beams are decorated with differently-shaped medallions in the middle.

The four central pillars of the navaranga are bell-shaped, the pilasters against the walls are of the indented pattern. On either side of the vestibule doorway there are perforated screens. The jambs of the doorway are plain Above the lintel there is an eaves-shaped cornice with dental mouldings

The ceiling of the vestibule is beautifully worked and consists of a square rising on corner stones set in the shape of an octagon. In the centre the ceiling is flat bearing a well-carved padma in the middle Around this lotus is a square band having several medallions carved with floral and figure sculptures among whom there are two flying figures of drummers The corner medallions bear peacocks and the figure-bearing medallions alternate with those bearing padmas.

The garbhagriha doorway has a well-carved Gajalakshmi lintel above which there is a turret-bearing eaves-shaped cornice On either side of the doorway there are Vaishnava dvārapālas. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is similar to that of the porch.

Main cell and image. Inside the garbhagriha the god Yōgānārasimha is seated gracefully on a Garuda pedestal (Pl III, 3) The height of the image including that of the pedestal is about 6 feet The god sits cross-legged with his lower hands hanging down on the knees which are tied by a yōgapatta. In the hind hands of the god are held chakra and śankha The ten incarnations of Vishnu are carved on the prabhāvali. The śimhalalāta and the garland and scroll designs on the tōrana are well carved. The god wears minutely worked ornaments all over his body and yajñōpavīta. His consorts stand on either side. On the whole the image is an impressive one of the 12th century and does credit to the sculptor.

To the east of the porch there is a modern shrine containing the image of a seated Lakshmi-Varāha group which appears to belong to the Vijayanagar period

Anugavalli

RĀMA TEMPLE

The village of Anugavalli lies at a distance of about two miles to the north-west of Dudda railway station. It contains a temple of the Hoysala period, called the Rāma temple by the villagers, but containing in the main cell an image of Kēśava

Situation.

Structurally the garbhagriha, the closed vestibule and the navaranga of the temple belong to the Hoysala period. There is a remarkable resemblance between the navaranga pillars of this temple and the navaranga pillars of the Śiva temple at

History.

Lōkikere in the Dāvangere taluk, Chitaldrug District. The latter temple was built during the days of Narasimha III, the Hoysala king. The same period may be assigned to the original structure of the Rāma temple also. The mukhamantapa was constructed probably during the 14th century when the space in between it and the navaranga was also walled up.

The outer walls of the original structure are relieved, at intervals, by thin right-angled pilasters and are raised on a basement consisting of two characterless flat cornices. Over the garbhagriha the tower rises in the form of a stepped pyramid. On the lintels of both the navaranga and garbhagriha doorways, figures of kalāśas have been carved. Each of the navaranga pillars contains a square base and a shaft having the following mouldings in order from below: sixteen-fluted, eight-sided, again sixteen-fluted, cubical, vase, drum and wheel.

The image of Kēśava inside the garbhagriha is poor in workmanship and cannot stand comparison with the usual sculptures of the Hoysala period. Probably the original Rāma image was lost for some reason and was replaced by the present Kēśava image during the 14th century when the mukhamantapa was built and the temple was given the present shape.

In the mukhamantapa the pillars are either bell-shaped or cylindrical while the pilasters against the walls are of the indented pattern.

Mukhamantapa.

All the ceilings of the mukhamantapa are flat. In front of the mukhamantapa there is now an open verandah which was perhaps constructed during the 17th century.

DILAPIDATED TEMPLE.

At a distance of about a hundred yards to the east-north-east of the Rāma temple, there is a dilapidated structure which, in its plan and construction, resembles the original structure of the Rāma temple described above and appears to have been originally another Vishnu temple as indicated by the Vaishnava dvārapālas guarding the vestibule doorway of the temple. The pillars of the navaranga of this temple are also carved in the same way as those at the Siva temple at Lōkikere. The jambs of the vestibule doorway are well-worked with floral, leafy, scroll and medallion ornamentation. The garbhagriha is empty, but in the north middle ankana of the navaranga there is a linga on a pānpītha. The linga appears to belong to the Hoysala period.

Honnāvara

The village of Honnāvara which lies at a distance of about three miles to the north-west of Anugavalli appears to have been a prehistoric Iron Age town. The origin of the name of the place is explained by the saying of the villagers that gold pieces (ores probably) are occasionally found in the neighbourhood, particularly after the rains. About half a mile to the south of this village, there is the village of Pungāme (or Pon-gāme) where also gold pieces or ores are said to be found. In both the places prehistoric Iron Age cromlechs are existing (Pl V, 3) and they suggest that their authors were ancient gold miners. With these names of Pungāme and Honnāvara, we may compare the names of Hunkunda and Honnāli where also traces of ancient gold mining have been discovered. 'Pum' or 'pon' and 'hon' refer to gold. In Hungunda, too, cromlechs have been found (see M A R 1941, p 58). There is thus every probability that the authors of the cromlechs were ancient gold miners. The area of the cromlechs in Pungāme is on a rising ground about 200 yards to the south of the village. There are many of them existing with an average diameter of about 20' and containing single rings of large boulders and headstones here and there. To the west, north and north-east of the area, about two or three miles away, are to be seen ranges of picturesque hills, while the ground slopes towards the tank of Anugavalli on the east.

KĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

The Kēśava temple stands to the south-west of the village of Honnāvara and faces east. It has been described in M.A.R. 1926. It consists of a garbhagriha, an open vestibule, a navaranga and a porch, the last of which is approached by a flight of steps on the east and has stone benches on the north and south, possibly with

Among the basement cornices of the porch, the cornice bearing a row of uncarved cross-shaped mouldings is absent. But in its place there is a frieze of rhomboidal four-petalled rosettes

The parapets of the temple are dilapidated. The eaves are short and straight-

Parapet and tower

The tower rises in three tiers which are all well-ornamented with kīrtimukhas, etc. Between the kīrtimukhas of the tiers there are rows of dentil and uncarved cross-shaped mouldings. On the top of the tower is a rude stone kalāśa. In front of the tower there is a projection over the vestibule with its front face carved with a sculptured panel depicting Yōgānarasimha under a kīrtimukha

Vishnu in the convolutions of a scroll. On either side of the god stand the images of his consorts who are rather conventionally treated. According to the inscription No 65 Hassan taluk, the image of Kēsava was consecrated in 1149 A D by one Sankaradandanātha during the time of Vishnuvardhana, the Hoysala King

ĪŚVARA TEMPLE

At a distance of about 150 yards to the north-east of the Kēsava temple stands the Īśvara temple of the village. In its style of workman-

General description. ship, so far as its interior is concerned, it appears to belong to a much older period than the Kēsava temple

The outer walls are plain and seem to have been rebuilt about 200 years ago. The main linga of the temple is of hard black stone and cone-shaped as at Gauja. Each of the four pillars inside the navaranga has an eight-sided shaft between two large cubical mouldings. The pillars, though plain, may belong to the Ganga period

The doorway of the vestibule with the perforated screens on either side and the Gajalakshmi lintel are of the Hoysala period and seem to have been inserted at a later period. Originally, however, the vestibule appears to have been open

The roof of the temple is low as in early structures. In the sukhanāsi is kept an image of Ganēśa of the Hoysala period. But the bull in the sukhanāsi is perhaps of the 17th century. Inside the navaranga are placed several nāga stones, a Saptamātrikā group and a Ganēśa image which are all of about the 17th century

In front of the navaranga there has been put up recently a porch, to the east of which is set up a rude pillar. To the east of the latter is a recently constructed four-pillared mantapa of no architectural merit

To the north-east of the Īśvara temple there is a low mantapa with a dolmen slab covering it. Inside it there is an image of a Śaiva dvārapāla which is of the Hoysala period. It is in the standing posture and half-buried in the earth

OTHER TEMPLES

Inside the village there are several other temples mostly belonging to the 17th and 18th centuries and calling for no special remark. The grāmadēvatā is called Kōdamma and her temple stands to the south-east of the village. This is a popular institution in the locality and has been in existence since about the 17th century. The image of the goddess is of stucco and is luxuriantly painted over and ornamented with kirita, bhujakirti, etc. Her vehicle is a he-buffalo.

The two front pillars of the porch are bell-shaped. The ceiling of the porch is damaged but appears to have had medallion ornamentation on its flat slab.

Porch.

The navaranga doorway is supported on either side by Vaishnava dvārapālas. The jambs of the doorway have the usual vertical bands of ornamentation consisting of scroll, petal, another scroll and medallion ornamentation. On the lintel is carved Gajalakshmi seated on simhāsana and attended by elephants and chauri bearers on either side.

Navaranga

The four central pillars of the navaranga are of the usual bell-shaped lathe-turned type. The mouldings on the shafts are gracefully carved with figures of medallions, kīrtimukhas, beaded hangings and scroll and petal designs. The side ceilings of the navaranga are raised on two sets of corner stones with full-blown lotuses in the centre. The central ceiling consists of a well-worked octagon and an equally well-worked square with a flat slab above, which is divided into nine figure-bearing panels. On the inner faces of the octagon are carved the figures of the eight Dīpālas, musicians, drummers, etc. On the inner faces of the square are dancing figures attended by drummers and musicians. On the flat slab is carved in the centre a three-headed and four-handed figure (? Brahma) holding chinmudrā, ankuśa, pāsa and kalāśa with ladle or staff. Flying figures of Yakshas with garlands are carved in the surrounding panels.

The ceiling of the vestibule is also well-carved like that of the navaranga. It also consists of an octagon and a square. The inner faces of the octagon have dancing figures of Śiva, Gaṇeśa, etc., attended by figures of drummers and musicians. On the inner faces of the square there are more dancing figures attended likewise by drummers and musicians. The top flat slab has nine panels of figure sculptures with Tāṇḍavēśvara in the central panel and the Dīpālas in the outer panels.

The doorway of the garbhagriha has vertical bands of scroll and medallion ornamentations carved with minute delicacy of detail.

Garbhagriha.

The doorway is supported by Vaishnava dvārapālas. On the pediment is a well-carved Gajalakshmi group. Above the lintel there is an eaves-shaped and straight-sided cornice on which are seated figures of Yakshas. The ceiling of the garbhagriha consists of a flat slab carved with a padma medallion in the middle.

The main image of Kēśava inside the garbhagriha is about 6 feet high excluding the Garuda pedestal on which it stands in samabhanga, holding padma, śaṅkha, chakra and gadā and wearing the usual ornaments all over the body, which are all minutely carved with details. The face of the god is somewhat longish with a long straight nose and rather ugly lips. On the tōrana are carved the ten avatārs of Kondajji.

Kondajji is an insignificant village situated at a distance of about six miles to the north-north-west of Sāligāme, a hobli in the Hāssan taluk. The old town appears to have existed near the Allālanātha temple which is standing at a distance of two furlongs to the west of the modern village.

About a furlong directly to the west of the temple is a rising ground containing about two dozen cromlechs (Pl. V, 4). The average diameter of each of the cromlechs is about 25'. These cromlechs are surrounded by single rings of large boulders. The head stones, however, are absent here. The situation of the cromlechs is in a beautiful spot with a good prospect all round. To the west is a hill known as the Sige-gudda. To the south-west is another hill called the Garada-gudda with the Bābābudans rising in the background far away. To the north, north-east and east are seen more ranges of hills in the distance. Exploration of the gorges and cuttings at the foot of the hills may possibly result in the discovery of Neolithic implements.

ALLĀLANĀTHA TEMPLE

The Allālanātha temple seems to have been originally constructed during the 14th century. It is very likely that some-time during the middle Vijayanagar period it fell into ruins and was thoroughly restored. Of the original structure, only the flat basement cornices, a few wall slabs and indented pilasters and the garbhagriha doorway are remaining at present. The navaranga with its tapering pillars belongs evidently to the period of restoration.

The outer walls of the temple are plain. The navaranga doorway is supported by two rudely carved dvārapāla images. On the cubical mouldings of the navaranga pillars are carved the figures of peacock, medallions, Kāliya-mardana, seated lions and a lady squatting in an obscene posture. On the western face of the base of the south-east pillar is carved the standing figure of a bhakta inside a shallow niche cut in the pillar.

On either side of the garbhagriha doorway there are rude relief figures of Hanumān which appear to have been carved at some later period.

Inside the main cell the image of Allālanātha has a colossal appearance, standing about 11 feet high on a pedestal about 4 feet in height (Pl. VI, 1). Though it has no tōrana behind it, it is no doubt a late Hoysala period image and a very successful piece with the contour of the limbs and delicacy of details forcefully carved. The face has a benign smile and very beautiful expression. The god is called also Varadarāja and represents the form of Janādana holding abhaya with lotus, chakra, śankha and gadā. He wears yajñōpavīta, minutely carved ornaments and well-worked drapery. In style of workmanship it reminds us of the image of Śelvapillai at Melkōte in the Mandya district. On the right chest of the god is carved a relievo figure of Lakshmi.

Adagur.

Adagūr is a road-side village on the Hāssan-Halebīd road and is situated at a distance of about six miles from Halebīd in a picturesque valley skirted by ranges of hills on all the sides except at the south-west, where we see far far away the misty Bābābudan ranges rising in a series of steps

Situation

History

The place seems to have been one of importance during the 12th and 13th centuries and to have been occupied by flourishing communities following Vaishnavism, Śaivism and Jainism. The temples that bear testimony to this fact are the following Lakshmi-nārāyaṇa temple, Vīrabhadra temple, Kallēśvara temple, Vardhamāna basti, another Kallēśvara temple, Mallikārjuna temple and Vighnēśvara shrine.

VIGHNĒŚVARA SHRINE

The image in the Vighnēśvara shrine inside the fort gate seems to be non-Hoysala in character. It is boldly carved with modest ornamentation on the body and jatāmakuta on the head

LAKSHMĪ-NĀRĀYANA TEMPLE.

The Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa temple is the most impressive among the monuments at the place and has been briefly noticed in M. A. R. 1930, page 4 It was probably built in circa 1,100 A.D. It stands towards the north of the village and has a good north-west view. It faces east and is constructed on a high platform which, in plan, follows the contour of the temple (Pl VII, 1). The plan of the garbhagriha as also that of the navaranga is square with several indentations. The cornices of the platform have no ornamentation. On the east there is a flight of steps supported on either side by niches whose small towers are missing. The temple consists of three garbhagrihas of which only the western one has a stone tower above it and a closed sukhanāsi to its front. The navaranga is common and to its east there is a porch of one ankana which is approached by a flight of steps on the east. On either side of the steps is a projection on which an elephant was probably standing originally.

General description.

The basement of the temple consists of eight cornices of which the sixth from the bottom has dentil mouldings and the seventh, uncarved right-angled and cross-shaped mouldings. The outer walls are relieved by turret-bearing shallow niches turret-bearing single right-angled pilasters and thin and tall right-angled pilasters having the vase, loaf and biscuit-shaped mouldings. In the middle of the wall right round the temple, that is, between the turrets and the pilasters bearing them, there is a highly indented eaves-shaped cornice which has tooth ornamentation at intervals. The turrets above the niches are mostly Dravidian in style, each of them consisting of three tiers of which the middle one has uncarved right-angled and cross-shaped mouldings. But the turrets above the single pilasters are mostly curvilinear in the North Indian style. The niches, the pilasters, the turrets and the eaves-shaped cornice in the middle of the wall coupled with the multi-indentations all round the temple heighten the effect of light and shade and are very impressive in spite of the fact that the temple has no wall images. (Please see Pl II, 1 and 2, M A R. 1930).

The eaves of the temple have a narrow 'S' curve and tooth ornamentation at the indentations. Above the eaves the parapet consists of

Eaves and parapet. several square-shaped and boat-shaped turrets with cornices having dentil projections upwards or downwards and the right-angled and latin cross-shaped and uncarved mouldings. The top of the parapet has a frieze all round consisting of uncarved flat panels probably meant for the kirtimukha and other designs

The stone tower above the main western cell rises in three tiers each of which consists of the dentil, right-angled and cross-shaped mouldings bearing uncarved flat panels meant for kirtimukha or other designs. The tower is surmounted by a stone kalāṣa which is of pleasing design. In front of the tower to the east there is a stone projection over the vestibule whose front face has an uncarved panel meant evidently for the carving of an image under a kirtimukha

Tower.

The porch in front of the temple has stone benches on either side edged by railings. The two front pillars of the porch are of the bell-shaped lathe-turned variety. The ceiling of the porch consists of an octagon with two sets of corner stones rising above and a low padma pendant in the centre

Porch

The navaranga doorway has indented pilasters on either side and a lintel stone with hanging padma pendants below and an eaves-shaped cornice above. A row of turrets much coated over with chunam surmounts the cornice. The jambs of the doorway are plain. Inside the navaranga the four central pillars are of the bell-shaped lathe-turned type, while the pilasters against the walls are all of the indented pattern. The side ceilings of the navaranga are rather deep, each rising on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the middle. The central ceiling is dome-shaped with four concentric circles rising above an octagonal set of corner stones and having a padma pendant in the centre. The inner faces of the corner stones have panels of which only the one to the south has been half-carved with the figure of Yama on it. The inner face of the first circle has a row of Dravidian turrets alternating with curvilinear towers and with the figures of rearing lions in between.

The doorway of the vestibule in front of the main cell has on either side cylindrical pilasters and perforated screens. The ceiling of the vestibule rises on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the centre.

The doorways of all the cells are similar to the navaranga doorway. Above the doorway of the main cell there is an eaves-shaped cornice surmounted by a row of five turrets of the curvilinear type, the central turret being flanked by rearing lions on either side.

The ceiling of the main cell is similar to the vestibule ceiling. Inside the cell is seated on a Garuda pedestal the main god Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇa with his right leg hanging down and with the goddess Lakshmī seated on his left lap. He is four-handed holding śankha, padma, gadā and chakra. The left lower hand holding the chakra embraces Lakshmī. The goddess holds padma in her left hand and is embracing the god with her right hand. Both the god and the goddess wear rich ornaments and yajñōpavīta. On the prabhāvali are carved the Daśāvatāras of Viṣṇu.

The ceiling of the north cell consists of an octagon and a square with a flat slab in the middle carved with a padma pendant. Inside the cell is seated the goddess Sarasvatī on a peacock pedestal. She holds rosary, ankuṣa, pāṣa and pustaka in her four hands and wears minutely carved ornaments on her body and a well-worked kirita on her head.

The ceiling of the south cell is similar to the one in the north cell. Inside the cell the image of the god Vēnugōpāla stands on a Garuda pedestal in tribhanga, with his body bent towards the right, and in the attitude of playing on the flute. Above the head of the god is represented a tree, while behind him is the prabhāvali on which are carved in successive rows from the bottom cows and cowherds and the Daśāvatāras of Viṣṇu. The god does not wear any kirita, but his hair is secured by a fillet above the forehead. The image is slender and impressive, though it is not as luxuriantly carved as the image at Sōmanāthapur in the Mandya district.

KALLĒSVARA TEMPLE

The Kallēsvara temple stands at a distance of about fifty yards to the south of the Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇa temple in Adagūr. It is a structure built barely two hundred years ago but containing in it several Hoysala architectural members like the doorway of the main entrance to the temple, the two bell-shaped pillars in the front porch, and the pillars, beams, etc., inside the temple. Above the entrance is placed a Hoysala group, while in a niche of the parapet of the temple is placed an image of Ganéśa of the Hoysala period. The latter is said to have been brought over from the Kallēśvara temple situated a furlong away to the north-west of the village.

In other respects the temple is architecturally unimportant. To the south of the entrance on the inner side there is a worn out image of Bhairava of the Hoysala period. Corresponding to it on the north side is set up a Hoysala vīragal.

The temple has been constructed mostly of the worked stones of the Hoysala period. The doorways of the navaranga, vestibule and garbhagriha are typically Hoysala in character. The central four pillars of the navaranga as also the four corner pilasters of the indented type and three wall sculptures of the Hoysala period, have all been brought over from some ruined temple and used here. Inside the garbhagriha the paṇipīṭha on which is set up a low linga is old in character.

VARDHAMĀNA BASTI.

The Vardhamāna basti is situated at a distance of about fifty yards to the west of the above-mentioned Kallēśvara temple. It consists of a garbhagriha, a closed vestibule, a navaranga, a front mantapa and an open one-ankana porch the front of which has been edged by stone railings. The porch has a flight of steps on the east, supported by stone elephants on either side.

The outer walls of the basti are raised on a basement consisting of two flat characterless cornices with an inner and larger cornice in between. In the north-east and south-east outer walls have been inserted some sculptures and pilasters of the Hoysala period. The eaves of the basti are straight-sided with corner dentil mouldings upwards. The parapet of brick and mortar is evidently of recent days.

The two front pillars of the porch which have a thick coat of chunām on them are of the thirty-two pointed star-shaped variety. The ceiling of the porch has been carved with the figure of an eight-handed dancing Indra in a circular panel whose outer four corners are carved with kīrtimukhas.

The doorway of the mantapa is guarded by Yaksha dvārapāla figures. On the lintel of the doorway there is a Gaja-lakshmi group. The navaranga doorway has indented pilasters on either side.

Navaranga

The jambs are carved with vertical bands of a scroll in the convolutions of which appear the figures of elephants, lions, horses, etc. On the pediment is the figure of a Jīna seated under a mukkode and supported by chāmara bearers on either side.

The navaranga pillars are of the bell-shaped lathe-turned type. The side ceilings are plain, but the central one is raised on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the middle. The doorway of the vestibule has perforated screens on either side. To the south of the vestibule doorway there are two small images of Dharanīndra Yaksha.

The image of Vardhamāna inside the garbhagriha is about four feet high and standing in the samabhanga posture under a mukkode.

In the basti there is a stone representation of what is called Mandara-śāla which is worked in the form of a brindāvana with stepped pyramidal cornices. On each facade of the śāla there are fifteen rows of sculptures representing various Mandarasaila. Tirthankaras. In all, there are about 504 saints depicted in the same way.

OTHER TEMPLES

About a furlong to the north-west of the village there are two temples of the Hoysala period dedicated to Kallēśvara and Mallikārjuna which appear to have been constructed during the 12th century A.D. The former temple faces east and the latter north. The latter temple is immediately to the south-east of the former. Both the temples are soap-stone structures having plain outer walls, basement cornices and stepped pyramidal towers with frontal projections over the vestibules. On the projections there are well-preserved Hoysala crests (Pl. V, 2, and VI, 3) depicting Śāla in the attitude of attacking the tiger. The stone finials of the towers are missing from both the temples.

The outer wall of the Mallikārjuna temple has a plain middle cornice all round. The temple consists of a garbhagriha, a vestibule, a navaranga and a porch. The roof of the temple is low and the pillars have cylindrical shafts on square bases.

Mallikarjuna. Inside the navaranga there is a well-carved bull of small size.

The Kallēśvara temple has a garbhagriha, a vestibule with a doorway having perforated screens on either side and a large closed mantapa in front, which appears to have been constructed in two different periods.

Kallesvara The central pillars in the ankana to the front of the vestibule are cylindrical. The other pillars of the mantapa are of the bell-shaped lathe-turned type. In the north-western corner of the mantapa there is a cell which appears to have been introduced at a later period. It contains a good image of Śūrya who holds natural-looking lotuses in his hands and wears a square-shaped tiara which rises in tiers. In the ankana to the front of the vestibule there is a good figure of Nandi which is similar in workmanship to the bull of the Mallikārjuna temple mentioned above. In the centre of the hall there is another bull which is rather rudely carved, though possessing good features In a niche of the parapet above the temple of Kallēśvara inside the village there is a nicely worked image of Ganēśa which is said to have belonged to this temple originally Kasipura.

About a mile directly to the north of Adagūr is the ancient site of Kāsīpura which is now overgrown with jungle and is deserted. The Situation and antiquity. place seems to have been a prominent one during the middle or the late Vijayanagar period. A rubble fort wall provided with corner bastions surrounds it. Towards the east of the site there is a high prākāra, inside which three ruined temples stand The middle temple is dedicated to Śiva, the south one to Pārvatī and the north one to Rāma. All the structures are now in a woefully ruined state

ŚIVA TEMPLE.

The Śiva temple contains a garbhagriha, a double vestibule, a navaranga, a front ardhmantapa and a pātālānkana The doorways of the garbhagriha and the inner vestibule are of soap-stone and appear to have been brought over from some ruined Hoysala structure On the two sides of the garbhagriha doorway there are perforated screens The lintel of the doorway has lotus drops. The ceiling of the garbhagriha, which is raised on two sets of corner stones, has a padma pendant in the centre which is Hoysala in character

General description.

The outer walls of the temple and the pillars of the navaranga, etc, are all constructed of granite and are typically of the middle or even late Vijayanagar period The pillars are Dravidian in type containing relievo figure sculptures on their cubical mouldings Among the figures there are nāgabandhas, cow and the linga, ladies, obscene figures, monkeys, ridden and unridden elephants, tiger, linga, Nandi, Yaksha, yāli, ridden horse, trunked bird, kalāśa, Virāñjanēya, lion, Vēnugōpāla, Kālinga-mardana, etc On one of the facades of the base of a pillar in the mukhamantapa is represented the relievo figure of a person wearing kīṛita on head and gown over body coming down to the knees and covering the hands completely On a cubical moulding of another pillar is the representation of two rearing parrots On another cubical moulding is sculptured a flower which looks very much like the flowers appearing in the ceilings of the temples of the Ikṛkēn school. Two of the pillars of the mukhamantapa have sixteen-fluted shafts ornamented with beaded and octagonal bands. The beads are large and look like rudrāksha Above the shafts the vases are also sixteen-fluted

RĀMA TEMPLE

The Rāma temple to the north of the Īśvara temple has a garbhagriha surrounded by an inner pradakshina, a navaranga and a mukhamantapa. The two front pillars of the mukhamantapa are Dravidian in type like the rest of the pillars; but the upper corners of their bases are carved to represent two-tiered pavilions which appear very much like observation towers. On the lintel of the sukhānāsi doorway is a figure of Ranganātha.

Among the main images of the temple, only that of Sītā is existing now, (Pl VI, 2), and that, too, in a mutilated condition. The image is of potstone with breast-band, pītāmbara and kirita. The height of the image is about 4' including the tōrana.

The parapets of both the Śiva and Rāma temples are provided with a series of brick and mortar niches of about the 17th century enshrining stucco images among which several are obscene. Parrot motifs also occur in the parapets.

MINOR STRUCTURES.

The Pārvatī temple to the south of the Śiva temple is characterless and does not call for any special remark.

All round, the prākāra has been provided on the inside with cells, particularly on the west. Inside the cells of the prākāra there were enshrined lingas originally. It is said that there were existing 101 such lingas.

To the west of the Pārvatī shrine was found a soap-stone image of a devotee standing, with folded hands and paraśu, under a kīrti-mukha and wearing a long cap folded to the left. The sculpture represents perhaps the builder of the temples during the Vijayanagar period.

There are two mahādvāras to the prākāra, one on the east and the other on the west. On the cubical mouldings of the pillars of the east mahādvāra are found figures of Yakshas, snake charmers, (Pl VIII, 1), etc. On either side of the mahādvāra on the inside are found rude reliefs of persons dressed in the Moghul fashion. The figure to the south has a parrot in the uplifted left hand and what looks like a Mahratta pagadī on the head. It is possible that the prākāra was added during the 17th century when the towers and parapets of the temples were also constructed.

Goni-Somenahalli.

ŚIVA TEMPLE.

Gōṇi-Sōmēnahallī is a village situated at a distance of about four miles to the east of Halebid. It contains a dilapidated Śiva temple

History and general description which is a structure of the Hoysala period and was constructed in 1227 A.D.

Of the two courses of the original outer walls the outer course has completely disappeared so that we cannot now form any idea with regard to the sculptural details of the walls. We find, however, a few architectural members here and there from which we may suppose that the outer walls were relieved by thin right-angled pilasters and that the eaves were straight-sided with upward dentil projections at intervals.

On the roof of the navaranga is placed a good Hoysala group which must have been originally placed on the projection of the tower over the vestibule.

The temple consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a navaranga and a small one-ankana porch. The front two pillars of the porch have each a square base and a cylindrical shaft. The roof of the temple is low.

Inside the navaranga the four central pillars are similar in character to those met with in the Chālukyan group of structures in the Dāvanagere Taluk (see M A R 1939). Each of them has the cubical, sixteen-fluted, octagonal, cubical, drum and wheel mouldings in order from the bottom.

Navaranga.

All the ceilings of the navaranga are a little deep and are raised each on two sets of corner stones with a padma pendant in the centre. The pilasters against the walls are indented. Against the north wall of the navaranga there is a turreted niche which is well worked but empty.

Inside the navaranga are placed a few characterless nāga stones, a Ganēśa and three exquisitely carved images of Sarasvatī, Shanmukha and Mahishāsuramardīnī. Though the last three images are now in a mutilated condition, they show high sculptural merit and minute delicacy of detail. The image of Mahishāsuramardīnī, particularly, is very impressive (Pl III, 4). She is eight-handed and among her attributes the arrow in the right uppermost right hand and the bow, the bell and the buckler in three of the left hands are carved realistically. The hand holding the arrow shows movement; the goddess is in the attitude of drawing out the arrow from the quiver at the back. The twist of the bow-string is clearly represented. The right leg of the goddess treads on the buffalo which protrudes its tongue under the weight of the goddess and is about to collapse. From out of the upper portion of the neck of the buffalo, the demon issues forth and has placed his left leg already on the ground while yet his right leg is within the buffalo. The goddess has bent his hand backwards and has speared him with her trident. Her act of killing the demon is accomplished and there is an expression of triumph on her face. She wears the usual ornaments and yaññōpavīta. In the image of Shanmukha who has six heads may be noticed the details of the peacock's feather and the rudrāksha garland around the neck of the bird.

The doorway of the vestibule has perforated screens on either side and is guarded by Śaiva dvārapālās. The garbhagriha doorway is also supported by similar dvārapāla figures. On the lintel of the latter doorway there is a Gajalakshmi group. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is raised on two sets of corner stones and has a padma in the centre. Inside the garbhagriha the linga is low, being about a foot in height including the pedestal. The bull in the vestibule has a stout body with a disproportionate neck and snout.

KADUR DISTRICT.

Hiremagalur.

This is a large village about a mile to the south-east of Chickmagalur. In the inscriptions of the eleventh century A. D., the place is called Priyamugulī agraḥār. Please see M. A. R. 1916, p. 21 for the tradition connected with the place. The village seems to be of considerable antiquity and to have been an agrahār town in c. 900 A. D. during the time of the Gangas.

Antiquity

ĪŚVARA TEMPLE.

Attributable, in all probability, to this early period is the Īśvara temple in the village. It stands a little distance directly to the west of the yūpastambha which has been declared as an Ancient Monument under Class II.

A tenth century structure

The temple has no doubt been rebuilt at some later period. But the navaranga pillars which are similar in character and type to those met with at the Rāmēśvara temples in Kubatūr (M. A. R. 1941, p. 18) and Narasamangala (M. A. R. 1937, pp. 22 ff.), the ribbed brackets above the pillars, the navaranga doorway which is similar in type to that of the Rāmēśvara temple at Kubatūr, the sculptural peculiarity of the so-called Jademuni to the north-east of the temple, the bull of the Kigga type (M. A. R. 1931, pl. VII, 3) to the south-east and the yūpastambha which no doubt seems to belong to the temple itself—all these declare the monument to belong to c. 900 A D

The linga inside the garbhagriha is not very large. It is about 2½ feet in height including the pedestal. With the pillars of the navaranga and their disposal we may compare those met with at the Nonabāśvara and Gangēśvara temples at Nonavinakere.

Each of them has a low square base on which rises a cylindrical shaft overlaid by several cylindrical mouldings. The shaft terminates in a vase shape and is surmounted by three wheel mouldings. The brackets are ribbed as in earlier temples.

The central ceiling of the navaranga is divided into nine panels by right-angled bands. In each panel is carved in bold relief a padma features suggestive of the lion and seated either in padmāsana or with crossed knees secured by a patta as in the

1. A vertical scroll band,
2. A pilaster having a low square base and octagonal, mono-cylindrical (right) or tri-cylindrical (left), cubical and vase mouldings on its shaft, and
3. A cylindrical shaft issuing out of petals and intertwined by a scroll. The base of the shaft on the right side is carved with the relievo figure of an elephant.

The porch of the temple which has pillars of the Dravidian type seems to have been put up during the 17th century A.D

To the south-east of the temple there is a natural-looking bull which, in its features, reminds us somewhat of the bull at Kigga though it may not be as beautiful. To the north-east of the temple there stands the image of what is called the Jade-muni.

(Pl. VIII, 2). It is an image in the round with dishevelled hair and having a padma medallion inset in a crescent above the right ear. Padma-kundalas are worn in the ears. The image wears like a Brahmachārī a loin cloth secured by a girdle. A belt-like band is also worn in the upavīta mode. The image has four hands and eight legs. The front four legs are in a row facing to front while the hind legs form two pairs facing opposite directions. In the four hands of the image are held the following attributes: rosary, a long staff, broken (looks like another staff) and a pitcher-like vase with lid, perhaps representing a kamandalu. There appears to be an indication of the phālāksha The hairs are arranged in falling curls (jatābhāra). Though the image is called Jade-muni, it looks likely that it may represent a form of Śiva as suggested by the crescent above the right ear.

Built into the steps of the temple is a portion of the eaves which is decorated on its undersurface by a frieze of flying geese.

The yūpastambha has a high cubical base, then a short octagonal moulding and then again another cubical moulding overlaid by a square abacus bearing a long lotus bud. On the east and west sides of the bud, there are three incised lines suggestive of a trident. On the east face of the base of the pillar was discovered a Kannada inscription of about the tenth century A.D.

KODANDA-RĀMA TEMPLE

The Kōdanda-Rāma temple to the south-east of the village seems to have been constructed in three stages of the earliest stage which appears to have originally consisted of the garbhagriha, the vestibule and the navaranga, only the garbhagriha and the vestibule are now existing. The present navaranga is possibly a work of the 14th century while the mukhamantapa is certainly not earlier than the 16th century.

History.

The outer walls of the garbhagriha and vestibule (Pl. IX, 1) are raised each on a square basement having flattened sides. The basement consists of six cornices of which the fourth and the fifth from the bottom have dentil mouldings and uncarved right-angled and oblong mouldings, respectively. The walls are divided into two compartments—upper and lower—by an eaves-shaped middle cornice running right round the garbhagriha and vestibule. In both the compartments are found wall images, while the upper compartment has, in addition, several turreted niches and turret-bearing pilasters.

Outer walls

to the outer walls of the mukhamantapa. The brick and mortar parapet and the projection over the vestibule in front of the tower are works of about the 17th century. But a portion of the parapet above the garbhagriha and vestibule is of stone having dentil mouldings.

The pillars of the mukhamantapa are of the Dravidian type and tapering. The navaraṅga doorway is guarded by Garuda on the right and Hanumān on the left. The entrance is provided with a wooden double door whose front face has well-carved wooden bands unfortunately covered over at present with a thick coat of muck and chunām. Among the ornamentations on the several bands are a scroll with graceful convolutions, beads, dentils and medallions. The door seems to be a work of about a hundred or a hundred and fifty years ago.

The four central pillars of the navaraṅga are high. Each of them consists of a square base and a cylindrical shaft. The pilasters against the walls are indented. The ceilings of the navaraṅga are characterless.

The temple appears to have had originally an open vestibule. At present, however, a doorway has been put up with a lintel stone covered by wood. The wood is much eaten up by white ants.

Vestibule.

On either side of the vestibule on the inside, brick and mortar walls have been constructed in recent days and two strong rooms have thus been introduced. The ceiling of the vestibule consists of an octagon and a square with a flat panel in the centre, divided into nine compartments in each of which there is a neatly carved rosary.

The garbhagriha doorway is typically Hoysala in character though the jambs are not well-carved with sculptural details. The pediment has an uncarved flat panel. The doorway is supported by

The prākāra shrines are all of recent days. In the cells to the west are enshrined the following images beginning from the south —

Images in prakara cells.

- 1 Vēdānta Dēśika (not of any sculptural merit)
2. Yōgā-narasimha with the knees crossed and without the yōgapatta. This is a typical Hoysala sculpture with the dāśavatāras on the prabhāvali
- 3 Sugrīva with folded hands. This is a rude image, about a hundred and fifty years old, with a Kannada inscription on the pedestal saying that it was consecrated by one Kāsiappa, son of Īśvarappa in the cyclic year Śārvarī (corresponding perhaps to 1780 A.D.)
4. A form of Viṣṇu (? Venkatēśa) holding what looks like a lump (?) in the front right hand, prayōga-chakra in the back right hand, natural-looking śankha in the back left hand and the front left hand placed on kati (Pl. X, 1) The image wears makarakundalas in the ears and moderate ornaments on the body. The kirita, too, is modestly worked. The god wears yajñōpavīta from the knot of which is suspended a long flowing chain which terminates in a jingle to the right of the right ankle. His drapery is down to the knees only. The general features of the image remind us of the image of Venkatēśa at Pālya, though the attributes here are different. The image is set up on a Garuḍa pedestal of the Hoysala period but having an inscription of about the 17th century saying that it is a gift of a certain Cheluviah. The image itself is perhaps of the 11th century A.D.

In the north-east prākāra also there are some cells enshrining images. In one of the cells the image of Rāmānujāchārya, which appears to be about 200 years old, is enshrined. In another cell there is a potstone figure of Yōgānarasimha under a gracefully worked prabhāvali, possibly of the Hoysala period. It looks as if this sculpture existed originally on the front face of the projection in front of the tower of the temple. Inside the cells of the Ālvārs and Āchāryas, the largest image which is in chinmudrā appears to represent Vēdānta-Dēśika. It may not be Rāmānujāchārya since his images are generally found with folded hands. To the left of this image are the images of Rāmānujāchārya (with folded hands and tridanda), Nammālvār and Tirumangai Ālvār.

PARASURĀMA TEMPLE

The Paraśurāma temple stands to the north-west of Hiremagalūr. It consists of a garbhagriha, a vestibule and a navaranga. The outer walls and tower which are built of brick and mortar may be assigned to about the 17th or 18th century. But the granite linga inside the garbhagriha, which is shaped like a thick rude paraśu or axe, is possibly of earlier days.

In front of the temple there are a virāgal and an inscription of about the 10th century A D. The latter looks very much like the Rāshtrakūta inscription stones in the Shimoga district

IMAGE OF KĀLĪ.

At a distance of about 50 yards to the north of the Paraśurāma temple there is a soap-stone sculpture in relief depicting Kālī. The goddess is two-handed holding sword in the right hand and an indistinct symbol in the left. She is seated in padmāsana on a pedestal on either side of which are a rearing lion and a lady attendant. In the upper panels on either side of the goddess there is an elephant holding above the head of the goddess what looks like a bell in its trunk. The upper edge of the prabhāvali is ornamented with a thick rope of rudrāksha.

Ambale

Ambale is a village situated at a distance of about two miles to the south of

CHENNIGARĀYA TEMPLE

The Chennigarāya temple contains a square garbhagriha, a vestibule and a square navaranga. The outer walls are raised on plain

The four central pillars of the navaranga have cylindrical shafts with square and wheel mouldings. All the ceilings are raised on two sets of corner stones with lotuses in the centre.

Inside the garbhagriha the image of Chennigarāya is about five feet high excluding the Garuda pedestal on which it is standing. Its lower right hand is broken, but the stalk of the lotus is visible. The other hands hold in order. śankha, chakra and gadā. The prabhāvali is carved with the ten avatāras of Vishnu. The main image is supported on either side by the images of the consorts of Vishnu

The temple was constructed by Ballāla II in 1178 A D. according to the inscriptions Nos 21 and 22, Chikmagalūr taluk.

LOKEŚVARA TEMPLE

This temple is similar in construction to the Chennigarāya temple. Inside its navaranga are set up the images of Ganēsa, Nandivāhanamūrti with Pārvatī, Sūrya and Shanmukha. The temple is architecturally unimportant.

VIRABHADRA AND VĒNUGŌPĀLA TEMPLES.

The Virabhadra temple is modern. The Vēnugōpāla temple, though also modern, is a popular minor muzrai institution and is built on a high platform. Though the building has no architectural importance, the image of Vēnugōpāla inside the garbhagriha is a well carved image of the Hoysala period.

Brahmasamudra

An account of the village of Brahmasamudra and its temples has appeared in the Annual Report of this Department for 1926. The place appears to have been the seat of a Pāleyagār during the 17th century. There is a mud fort wall all round the village, with a moat outside it.

But during the Hoysala period there were two temples Dedicated to Viranārāyana and Nākanāthēśvara. Of these only the Viranārāyana temple is now standing intact. On the site of the old Īśvara temple is built at present a country-tiled house to serve the purpose of the temple.

VIRANĀRĀYANA TEMPLE

The plan of the Viranārāyana temple is simple. The garbhagriha and navaranga are both square in plan. Two of the basement cornices have the uncarved dentil, right-angled and cross-shaped mouldings. On the outer walls are found only the right-angled pilasters bearing biscuit-shaped mouldings. The eaves are straight with dentil mouldings projecting upwards at the corners.

The porch is entered by a flight of steps supported on either side by stone elephants. The two front pillars of the porch are bell-shaped and lathe-turned like the four central pillars of the navaranga. The navaranga doorway has the usual jambs with vertical bands of ornamentation. But the bands are uncarved. On the architrave is a relieve figure of Garuḍa. The upper lintel is carved with a row of turrets, both Dravidian and curvilinear. While the ceiling of the porch is flat and divided into nine panels carved with lotuses, the ceilings of the navaranga are all well carved as follows proceeding from the east clockwise.—

- 1 Circular and dome-like with padma pendant
2. Two sets of corner stones with padma inset in a Śrichakra.
3. and 4. Same as No 2.
5. Eight-pointed star with octagon further up and a padma inset in a circle in the centre
6. Three sets of indented squares with padma pendant in the centre
- 7 Four concentric indented circles with padma pendant in the centre.
- 8 Three concentric eight-pointed stars with padma pendant in the centre.
- 9 (Central) The central ceiling is deep and rises in the form of a dome with three concentric circles rising above two sets of octagons In the centre of the ceiling there is a large padma pendant On the front face of the lower set of the octagons are carved the figures of the eight Dikpālas in their positions with figures of marching warriors in between

The lintel of the vestibule doorway contains an exquisitely carved Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇa group supported on either side by richly floriated and minutely carved ridden makaras (please see illustration in M. A. R. 1926, Pl VIII) The lintel of the garbhagriha doorway has a boldly carved Gaja-Lakshmī group

The main image of Nārāyaṇa inside the garbhagriha stands on a Garuda pedestal holding in his four hands sankha, padma, gadā and chakra. It is a beautiful sculpture with minutely worked ornaments all over the body and a rich bejewelled kirita on the head. Including the Daśāvātāra prabhāvali and the pedestal the image is about 5 feet high.

In the navaranga of the temple the following images are found :—

1. A rudely carved Vēnugōpāla, probably of the 14th century.
- 2 A Saptamātrikā group, probably brought from the ruined Śīva temple.
3. A well-carved Yogānarasimha image of the Hoysala period.
4. An equally well-carved image of Ganēśa, also of the Hoysala period

NAKANĀTHĒŚVARA TEMPLE

The modern country tiled house which enshrines the old linga of Nākanāthēśvara calls for no special remark But on either side

Dvarapala images . of the building there are two images of Saiva dvārapālas (Pl. VIII, 3 and 4) which appear to have belonged to the original temple These images, though somewhat smaller in size, are so exquisitely carved with plentiful details of ornamentation that they are not in any way inferior in workmanship to the large-size dvārapālas at the Hoysalēśvara temple in Halebid.

Mallesvara.MODERN TEMPLES

Mallesvaradamma temple Mallēśvara is a small village situated at a distance of about a mile and a half to the south-east of Kadūr. To the south-west of the village stands the temple of the goddess of the village, called Mallēśvaradammā. She is also called Honnaralammā or Honnu-Aralammā because she is said to have been formerly standing under a peepul tree (Arali-mara). Inside the temple, however, there is no image but only an ant-hill which is said to contain the image of the goddess.

The structure itself is barely forty years old and calls for no remark. It is a building of size stones and masonry pillars, and is enclosed in a wide prakāra. It is said that there is a copper plate inscription pertaining to the temple in the possession of one Dēvara Bhatta of Tarikere who is said to be the pūjārī of the temple. The inscription is reported to consist of a single copper plate written on only one side.

To the west of the Mallēśvaradammā temple is a mono-celled modern structure built for the goddess Kenchammā and Chaudammā. Inside the cell there are also some rude stones shaped like neolithic celts and worshipped by the villagers.

Kenchamma and Chaudamma.

At a little distance to the north of this temple is another modern structure of mud and rubbles built for the goddess Mātangī. The image is a form of Durgā, about nine inches in height. It is a relieve sculpture in the seated posture.

Matangi.

Inside the village there is a temple of perhaps the Pāleyagār period containing the metal images of the Mallēśvaradammā temple. The pillars of the navaranga are Dravidian in type and tapering. On one of the ceilings there is the representation of a crawling cobra.

Modern temple

RĀMĒŚVARA TEMPLE

At a distance of about a mile to the south-east of Mallēśvara is situated, in a toddy grove, the temple of Rāmēśvara whose outer walls have, in recent times, been built of size stones. But the inner view of the temple shows that it was originally constructed perhaps during the 13th century A D.

History.

The garbhagriha doorway is ornamented on the jambs with kalaśas and vertical bands of floral and rope designs. The vestibule is open.

General description. The four central pillars of the navaranga are short and Dravidian in type with cubical, sixteen-fluted and octagonal mouldings. They are made of granite.

To the south-east of the temple there is set up a pot-stone inscription of the Hoysala period. Unfortunately the letters of the inscription are completely effaced

MALLĒDĒVA TEMPLE

This is a structure in the village going back to about the 12th century A.D. according to the inscription No. 10 Kadūr, which records a grant to the temple. In the inscription the god is called Mallikārjuna

History.

The outer walls of the temple have all collapsed. In their place walls of rubble and mud have been constructed. The structure consists of a garbhagriha, a vestibule (recently closed), a navaranga and a porch. Inside the navaranga each of the four central pillars has the cubical, eight-sided and cylindrical mouldings. The central ceiling has a boldly carved padma. The roof of the structure is low. The linga inside the garbhagriha is about 3 ft. in height including the pedestal and is flat topped

General description.

Tangali

To the south-south-east of Kadūr at a distance of about 3 miles lies the village of Tangali which appears to have been an ancient agrahāra town of the Hoysala period

History

The Īśvara temple which stands to the north-east of the village is a structure of c. 1200 A.D. But the Yōgā-Narasimha temple is a later structure, perhaps dating from about the 17th century as indicated by its workmanship.

Temples.

YŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE

There are two cells in the Yōgā-Narasimha temple, one enshrining the image of Kēśava and the other, the image of Yōgā-Narasimha. It is said that formerly only the Kēśava image and shrine existed and that during recent days, that is about 60 or 70 years ago, the Yōgā-Narasimha image was brought from somewhere and installed in the other cell. It is very likely that the image was carved during the late Vijayanagar period.

Yoganarasimha.

The image of Kēśava appears to belong to about the Hoysala period, though the prabhāvali is absent. The archaic smile and the pitted face, however, are similar to the Pāleyagār period images.

Kesava.

ĪSVARA TEMPLE.

structure of the 13th century A.D. Above its garbhagriha the tower rises in the form of a stepped pyramid with a partly dilapidated stone projection over the vestibule. The outer walls of the temple consist of plain slabs set on edges. The basement consists of five plain cornices. The temple consists of a garbhagriha, a vestibule and a navaranga with a doorway and a porch to the south. The pillars of the porch are cylindrical. Inside the navaranga are found the sculptures of Nandi and Sarasvatī, both of which are of the Hoysala period.

come across a group of rocky boulders which collectively are called by the villagers as the Hulikal area. On the north-western face of one of the boulders are carved several panels of sculptures in two rows, the upper row consisting of five rude figures of Jain saints in the standing posture and the lower one consisting of eight figures of seated saints. The standing figures are carved below arches which are Muslim in character. Below the eight larger figures in the lower row are inscribed the names of the saints in Kannada characters which appear to belong to about the 15th or 16th century. From left to right the names read: Nēmannagalu, Rākannagalu Vinaya-Bhattarakaru, Āryasēna-Bhattarakaru, Ajitasēna-Bhattarakaru, Prabhāchandra-dēvaru, . . . dēvaru and Gunakīrti-dēvaru.

In a middle panel between these names there are carved smaller figures of four more saints whose names, however, are not inscribed.

Macheri

The village of Macheri which is situated at a distance of about three miles to the south-east of Kadūr appears to be a place of great antiquity. The main structure of the Yōgā-Narasimha temple at the place has pillars and ceilings which resemble those met with at the Nonabēśvara and Gangēśvara temples in Nonavinakere, Tumkur district (please see M.A.R. 1939, pl. XVIII, 1) which have been assigned to circa 900 A.D.

YŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE.

The outside view of the temple is insignificant and weird with the ruined tower and collapsed walls of the prākāra belonging to about the 17th century. The temple, as it is, consists of a garbhagriha whose outer walls have disappeared, an open vestibule with two slender cylindrical pillars in front as at Nonavinakere, a navaranga with the four central pillars looking almost like the ones met with at Nonavinakere and some temples at Āvani, a mukhamantapa and kaisāle with the main towered entrance on the north side

Main image. His crossed legs are not completely tied up by the yōgapatta which is broken between the knees. The front hands are freely resting about his knees while in the back hands are held śankha and chakra. He is supported on either side by small figures of his consorts. The Daśāvatāras of Viṣṇu are carved on the prabhāvali. Excluding the pedestal the image is about 2' high. The fact that the pedestal does not appear to belong to this image suggests the possibility that the original image of the temple was lost and that the present one was installed perhaps in c 1300 A.D.

RUINED KĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

To the north of the Narasimha temple there is a ruined temple built for enshrining an image of Kēśava which is now missing. The outer walls, doorways, etc., are all characterless. The navaranga pillars have octagonal shafts rising on square bases. Inside the navaranga there is a mutilated Vaishnava dvārapāla.

ĪŚVARA TEMPLE

The Īśvara temple which, according to an inscription lying in its navaranga, is called the Kalidēva temple is a Hoysala structure constructed during the early part of the 12th century A.D. when King Viṣṇuvardhana was ruling. It has become unfortunately greatly dilapidated and is beyond repairs. It consists of a garbhagriha, an open vestibule and a navaranga. The last is unduly large and provided with porches both on the north and south. Four of the pillars of the navaranga are bell-shaped and lathe-turned.

A TRADITIONAL ACCOUNT REGARDING MACHERI.

The name 'Macheri' is locally explained to have been derived from the word 'Matsyapuri'. Matsyapuri was the capital of Virāta, a Capital of Virata. king mentioned in the Mahābhārata.

At a distance of less than a mile to the east of the place the river Vēdāvati which flows on a hard rock bed cutting it in several places is called 'Kuntī-hole'. Here it is said that Kuntī met her sons, the Pāṇdavas, who were having their 'ajñātavāsa'.

Kuntīhole.

The present Kōḍanda-Rāma temple which stands on the west bank of the river and is definitely a structure of the Pāleyagār period has of course nothing to do with the tradition.

About two furlongs to the east of Kuntīhole there is a hillock which is pointed out as the Kichakana-gudda, that is the place where

Kichaka's abode

Kichaka, the brother-in-law of king Virāta, lived. On the summit of the hillock there is a cave shrine enshrining about seven natural stones of which one is pointed out as representing Mylāra-dēvaru or Mallidēva who is said to have been the family deity of Kichaka. The village at the foot of the hillock is called Mallidēvanahalli.

At a distance of about a mile and a half to the north of Macheri there is a village called Turuvvanahalli. 'Turu' means cattle and the village is said to mark the spot of 'Uttaragōgrahana' where Arjuna is said to have rescued the cows of the city of Virāta.

place of great antiquity. In the inscription No. 21, Kadūr Taluk, of 1089 A.D. a temple of Gangēśvara is mentioned. This temple is no longer in existence.

KĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

Among the temples now existing at the place, that of Kēśava is the largest.

It stands to the south-west of the village and faces east.

The three cells.

Though it is now a triple-celled structure enshrining Kēśava in the main cell, Vēnugōpāla in the south cell and Lakshmīnārasimha in the north cell, it is only the last mentioned cell that appears to be clearly the earliest of the three, having been built of soap-stone and having distinctly different basement cornices and right-angled pilasters on the outer walls. The other cells are built of granite and their outer walls are relieved by flatter right-angled pilasters.

The images, however, in all the three cells are very good works of art of the Hoysala period, the image of Lakshmīnārasimha being the best of them. The image of Vēnugōpāla in the south cell stands cross-legged under a tamāla-tōraṇa playing on the flute in a graceful attitude as at Bellūr and Kuppagadde. The image of Kēsava in the main cell has no prabhāvali while the images in the other two cells have. It would therefore appear that the image is of a slightly later period and may have been installed towards the close of the 13th or at the beginning of the 14th century. On the prabhāvali of the Lakshmīnārasimha image the ten avatāras of Vishnu are represented.

In the north-western corner of the navaranga, there is a beautiful image of Dakṣināmūrti which is evidently of the Hoysala period. He is seated with the right leg on the ground and the left one folded up and placed on the seat. His four hands are thus disposed: chinmudrā, holding rosary, holding pāsā and holding pustaka.

The pillars of the navaranga are all characterless. There is not even one bell-shaped pillar. All the pillars have square bases and Pillars and doorway octagonal shafts.

The doorway of the Gōpālakrishna shrine and a prop given in the navaranga to support a cracked beam form a distinct group and appear to belong to some temple of the 10th century. The prop is a pillar of the Nonavinakere type and in all probability belonged, along with the doorway, to the Gangēśvara temple mentioned in the inscription No 21, Kadūr Taluk.

In front of the navaranga there is a 'jagali' on either side. On the right jagali is placed a large mutilated image of Sarasvatī of the Hoysala period. To further front there is an open mantapa of the Pāleyagār period. To further east there is the mahādvara of the temple. On the cubical mouldings of two of the pillars in the open mantapa appear the relievo figures of two devotees whose names are carved below them thus: 1. Nallapa Hebbāruvāna makalu Lakṣmana Hebbāruva (Lakṣmana Hebbāruva son of Nallapa Hebbāruva); 2. Dēvapa Hebbāruvāna makalu Kāmapa Hebbāruva (Kāmapa Hebbāruva, son of Dēvapa Hebbāruva).

At the entrance to the village on the east, there is a very good image of Hoysala Sarasvatī.

Sarasvatī (Pl X, 3) which is exquisitely carved and is definitely of the Hoysala period.

KALLĒSVARA TEMPLE

On the western bund of the tank of the village stands the Kallēśvara temple, the garbhagriha portion of which appears to be very old as indicated by its basement cornices, the middle one of which is round. The linga in the main cell is large and flat-topped. The navaranga of the temple, however, is a recent addition.

RUINED ĪŚVARA TEMPLE

On the northern side of the tank and to the north-east of the village, there was standing another temple dedicated to Kallēśvara and originally consisting of a garbhagriha, a vestibule and a navaranga with its doorway on the south. The outer walls of this temple have all disappeared. The navaranga doorway is very ornamentally carved in a style similar to the doorway of the Īśvara temple at Hiremagalūr. There are vertical bands on the jambs, consisting of the floral and rope mouldings. The pilasters on either side are cylindrical and coiled by a highly floriated creeper. Underneath the jambs on either side is a panel of sculptures. It may be noted however that the rope band on the jambs is absent at Hiremagalūr.

Garji

The village of Garji is situated at a distance of about nine miles to the east of Bīrūr. It was an ancient agrahāra town which, according to the Inscription No. 22, Kadūr Taluk, dated 1080 A D, was called Hiryan-Garāje. According to the local traditional account there were forty Śrīvaiṣṇava families known as the Hebbāruvas living at the place in olden days. At present, however, there is not even one Śrīvaiṣṇava family.

KALLĒŚVARA TEMPLE

The Kallēśvara temple stands in the north-east quarter of the village. About a hundred yards to the east of the temple is to be found the tank of the village, which may be identified with the 'Hirya-kere' mentioned in the inscription referred to above.

The outside view of the temple is so whitewashed and altered by recent renovation work that we might mistake the building for a modern one.

The interior, however, bespeaks of the antiquity of the structure (Pl IX, 2). The navaranga doorway resembles closely the doorway of the Gangēśvara temple at Nonavinakere in the Tumkūr district. The lintel bears an eaves-shaped cornice with a row of flying geese below. On either side of the jambs are indented pilasters ornamented with beaded hangings on their shafts. On the lintel is the representation of a scroll, the convolutions of which bear figures of dancers, musicians, etc. The middle of the cornice is decorated by a Gaja-Lakṣmī group.

Inside the navaranga the four central pillars form one group and are well-carved. The base of each pillar is square and the shaft has an eight-sided moulding at first and then is sixteen-fluted over the cylindrical, the bell and drum mouldings

Between the cylinder and the bell there is a sixteen-sided band. Above the drum, the vase and wheel-shaped mouldings are plain but boldly carved. On some of the faces of the base of each pillar are to be found carved panels of sculptures which remind us of Chōla work (cf. similar work at Hale-Ālūr)

These sculptures are as follows —

1. South-east pillar.—

East Face —Lakshmī seated under a canopy of conch shells, in padmāsana, holding in her two hands lotuses and attended by female chaurī-bearers. The nimbus behind her head is also skirted by a row of conch shells. The goddess and her attendants have bare breasts.

North Face —Natarājā dancing on Andhakāsura in a vigorous pose amidst a host of attendant figures of drummers, cymbalists and flutists. At the left hand upper corner of the panel a dog is represented. Śiva is four-handed with abhaya, trident, and hooded cobra in three of the hands, and the fourth, that is the front left hand, being in the crosswise attitude and stretched towards his right hip. He wears jatāmakuta and yajñōpavīta.

2. South-west pillar —

North Face —Four-handed Śiva (Pl XI, 2) standing in an oval panel the edge of which is ornamented with a scroll. Śiva wears jatāmakuta, phālāksha, rudrāksha garland and yajñōpavīta. The front right hand is in abhaya holding rosary. In the back right hand is held the ankusa and in the back left, the mṛiga. The front left hand is placed palm upwards on the inner margin of the panel. The four corners of the panel have the following figures: in the two corners to the right of the god there are a three-headed deity (Brahma) riding the peacock (above) and a four-handed standing figure (Viṣṇu), in the two corners to the left of the god are a boar (above) and a three-headed standing figure (Brahma) below. At the foot of the panel there is the bowing figure of a bull-headed and human-bodied devotee who may possibly be identified with Nandi. The relief oval panel with the image of Śiva suggests that the representation is of Lingodbhava-mūrti. The figure of the boar in the left top corner suggests that the image may represent Vishnu who is said to have explored the Pātāla in the form of a boar to find the bottom of the līṅga.

3. North-west pillar —

South Face.—Ardhanārīśvara-mūrti with the right half as male holding sarpa and mṛiga and the left half as female holding rosary. The left front hand is placed on the head of his two-handed consort. The god wears jatā, phālāksha, garland and yajñōpavīta and stands in samabhanga.

East Face—Harīhara (Pl. XI 3) with trident and rosary in the right hands and śankha and gadā in the left hands. The god wears phālāksha and yajñōpavīta.

4. North-east pillar —

South Face—A vigorous representation of Gajāsura-mardana-mūrti (Pl. XI, 4). Śiva is eight-handed and is dancing. To his right we may see the head of the elephant demon and to the left the figures of a mother and child. The latter figures may be Pārvatī and Skanda.

East Face—Lakṣmī seated on lotus and attended by chāmara-dhārmīs.

In front of the open vestibule there are two slender pillars of the Nonavinakere type with cubical, cylindrical, bell, drum, vase and wheel mouldings. On the faces of the base, here again as in the case of the navaranga pillars, are carved relieve sculptures as follows —

South pillar.—

East Face—A well-carved elephant.

North Face—God Venkatēśa standing with abhaya, chakra, śankha and katihasta. He wears jatāmakuta and yajñōpavīta.

North pillar —

East Face—A very vigorously represented Mahishāsuramardinī.

The central ceiling of the navaranga is divided into nine panels by bands running at right angles. The panels, however, are plain. In the central ankana there are two Nandis facing the main līṅga. In the south-west corner of the navaranga are placed the following images —

1. A Saptamātrikā group attended by Virabhadra on the right and Ganapati on the left. Among the Saptamātrikās, Kaumārī is left out and there are two figures of Vaṣṇavī.

Images.

2. An image of Ganapati holding tusk, prayōga-chakra, natural śankha and apūpa. Though the figure is ugly, it appears to be old.
3. Single-headed and two-handed Kumāra riding a peacock: a rude figure, though old.

To the south of the navaranga is a cell containing an image of Virabhadra, about 4½ ft. high, which appears to be a work of about the 14th century. The sculpture is rudely worked.

Inside the garbhagriha the linga is about 2½ ft high including the pedestal and is flat-topped.

KĒŚAVA TEMPLE

The Kēśava temple at Garu stands at a distance of about a hundred yards to the south-west of the Īśvara temple. It appears to be a structure of the 15th century and of little architectural merit. There is no image in the garbhagriha at present. The pillars of the navaranga and the porch are Dravidian in type with the cubical and octagonal mouldings alternating. On the cubical mouldings appear the relievo figures of Bālakrishna, Yōgānarasimha, yālī, monkey, peacock, devotee, etc.

Yagati.

Yagati is the headquarters of a hobli in the Kadūr taluk and is situated at a distance of about 12 miles north-north-east of Kadūr. The place has historical associations mostly with the late Vijayanagar and Pāleyagār periods. A certain Rangappa Naik is said to have been ruling over the place and to have had a concubine called Venkatī, from whose name the place-name is said to have been derived. Whatever be the truth regarding this story, it is certain that the place was called 'Yagati' during the 16th century when Sadāśivarāya was ruling at Vijayanagar. The emperor's inscription is to be found set up in front of the Vīranārāyana temple at the place. The village is surrounded by a fort wall, now ruined, with a moat outside. Near the fort-gate are found the temples of Hanumān and Ganapati. The image in the Hanumān temple is that of Virāñjanēya and appears to belong to the Pāleyagār period.

History

VIRANĀRĀYANA TEMPLE

The temple of Vīranārāyana standing in the village appears to be a structure of about the 14th century. It has plain outer walls and thick Dravidian pillars in the navaranga. The image in the main cell is about 4½ ft. high excluding the Garuḍa pedestal on which it is standing in samabhanga. In the four hands of the image are held śankha, padma, gadā and chakra. The stone prabhāvalī behind the image is ornamented with floral and scroll designs but without the representation of the Daśāvatāras of Vishnu.

The doorways and ceilings at the temple are all plain. The central ceiling is raised on two sets of corner stones and has a low padma pendant in the middle.

Against the walls of the navaranga are placed the following images —

Images.

1. A beautifully carved Ganēśa image on a mūshaka pedestal.
2. A small image of Yōgānarasimha
3. A small image of Virāñjanēya simply placed on a Garuda pedestal which certainly does not belong to it

On the cubical mouldings of the pillars of the navaranga are carved relievo figures of Hanumān, Garuda, yālī and medallions

Mudigere.

SINGĒŚVARA TEMPLE

Mudigere is a small village situated at a distance of about seven miles to the south-south-east of Ajampūr. To the north of the village

History

there is a dilapidated Śvara temple which, according to the inscription No. 83, Tarikere Taluk, is called the Nārasingēśvara temple and was constructed in 1233 A. D. by three gaudas named respectively Rāma-gauda, Sōma-gauda and Bayicha-gauda

The temple consists of a garbhagriha enshrining a linga on a round pedestal as at Sōmpura, a vestibule, a navaranga with a cell on the north containing an image of Harihara and a porch on the east. The outer walls are raised on a basement consisting of four cornices of which the second from the bottom has a row of dentil mouldings. The walls are plain and built of slabs placed on edges. The eaves above the garbhagriha are a little sloping. The brick and mortar tower appears to belong to the 17th century, to which period may also be assigned the porch of the temple with its two Dravidian type pillars

The navaranga doorway is supported by Śaiva dvārapālas above whom the jambs consist of vertical bands ornamented with scroll and creeper, pilaster and scroll and medallion designs. The architrave has a relievo representation of Gaja-Lakshmi, while the lintel stone is shaped like a gracefully disposed and highly indented eaves-shaped cornice the front face of which is carved with minutely worked beaded hangings. The top of the cornice has at the indentations a series of dentil mouldings projecting upwards.

Inside the navaranga the four central pillars are typically Hoysala in character being lathe-turned and carved of soap-stone. Each of the pillars has a square base and the usual disc, bell, vase, drum and wheel mouldings on the shaft. The ceilings are all a little deep with low pendant lotuses in the centre. The central ceiling is raised on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the middle.

On the jambs of the vestibule doorway appear scroll and medallion ornamentation.

Vestibule.

On either side of the jambs are pilasters with cubical and eight-sided mouldings. On the cubical mouldings appear figures of damsels in the attitude of either dancing or being at toilet.

Inside the vestibule there is a couchant Nandi. The ceiling of the vestibule is raised on two sets of corner stones with a padma in the hexagonal middle of a Śrīchakra.

In the navaranga is placed on a scorpion pedestal a well-worked Bhairava image standing in tribhanga under a floriated prabhāvali. The god is four-handed and holding broken (possibly sword), trident, damaru and severed human head. The dripping blood from the severed neck is being licked by a dog. On either side of the god are male and female goblins dancing and full of movement. The god wears jaṭā and is shaded by a cobra. He is naked but well ornamented. He wears yañjñōpavīta. Since the image is mutilated, it is not being worshipped.

In the cell to the north of the navaranga is enshrined an exquisitely carved image of Harihara. He stands in samabhaṅga holding in his four hands the following attributes: broken, trident, chakra and śankha. He is supported on the right by Pārvatī and on the left by Lakshmī. On the prabhāvali behind the god, there is the representation of the eleven Rudras on the right and of the Daśāvatāras of Viṣṇu on the left. The pedestal bears the figure of Nandi on the right and that of Garuda on the left. Including the pedestal, the image is about four feet high.

LAKSHMĪ-NĀRĀYANA TEMPLE.

At a distance of about a hundred yards to the south-west of the Narasingeśvara temple stands the temple of Lakshmī-Nārāyana which appears to be a structure of about the 14th or 15th century. It consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaraṅga and is constructed on a high platform. Since a large neem tree has grown just in the middle of the navaranga, all the ceiling slabs have been pulled down and the wall slabs have gone out of plumb beyond repair.

Inside the garbhagriha is enshrined a well-carved image of Lakshmī-Nārāyana in which we can see the imitation of Hoysala sculptures on the one hand and the archaic smile of about the 15th century on the other. The image of the goddess on the lap of the god is well-chiselled.

RĀMĒŚVARA TEMPLE

At a distance of about a hundred and fifty yards to the north-west of the Nara-singēśvara temple we come across the site of the old Rāmē-svara temple the linga of which was consecrated in 1173

History. A.D. by Belagauda, the Mahāprabhu of the place, ruling under the Ganga chief Kongulivarma Narasimha during the reign of the Chālukya king Trailōkyamalla Vikramādityadēva. (E C, Kadur, Tarikere Taluk, 85).

The original temple has completely disappeared excepting only for the old Rāmēśvara linga for whom, at present, a mono-cell of size stones has been built. The linga is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet high and is round-topped.

To the north-east of the temple, in the open, stands on a Garuda pedestal an image of god Viṣṇu as Venkatēśa (Pl X, 4), holding in his four hands gadā (with butter ?), prayōgachakra, natural śankha and katihasta. The image is carved of granite and Venkatesa. stands in samabhanga wearing kiritamakuta, makarakundalas and yajñōpavīta. In its style of workmanship, it appears to belong to about the 11th century A.D. and has thus no bearing with the Rāmēśvara temple.

Asanāi

Asanāi is a village in the Kadūr Taluk, situated at a distance of about five miles to the east of Ajampura. There are several old inscrip-

Situation and importance. tions in the village which go to show that the place was one of considerable importance in ancient times and was the headquarters of a nād ruled by the Gangas and Hoysalas. From the inscription Kadūr 154 of 1206 A.D., it is learnt that there were at least thirteen Śiva temples at the place formerly. At present, however, there are only three of them existing more or less intact.

These two temples form a large single homogeneous structure with two shrines side by side and a long common open mantapa in front with General description. two porches on the east, one for each shrine (Pl. IX, 3).

The temples are situated immediately to the south of the now dried up old large tank of the village. They were constructed in 1191 A.D. by the local Ganga chief (E. C. Kadūr Taluk, 157).

The outer walls of both the shrines are constructed in the same style on an indented square plan. The basement of each shrine consists of four cornices of which the last from the bottom has a row of dentil cuttings. The outer walls are relieved by right-angled pilasters at the indentations. Between these pilasters there are turret-bearing single and double right-angled columns on the outer walls of the south cell and turret-bearing double columns only on the outer walls of the north cell. The double columns form niches with unworked panels between them, evidently meant for carving wall images. The turrets are mostly Dravidian in type, those borne by single columns standing under highly flornated śiṃhalalāṭas. The eaves are straight-sided with dentil mouldings above projecting upwards. The original towers, if indeed there were any, have now disappeared.

The common open mantapa whose inner view presents a long three-aisled hall (Pl. IX, 4), running north to south is entered by two approaches, one on the east and the other on the south. On either side of each approach are projecting stone platforms meant probably for the supporting elephants. The outer edge of the mantapa has stone benches all round excepting only on the north side and is skirted by a stone railing whose outer face is carved with figures of turrets, rearing lions, double bell-shaped columns, rhomboidal medallions, etc.

The pillars of the mantapa are all of the usual bell-shaped and lathe-turned variety. Some of the ceilings, particularly the larger ones in front of the shrines, are carved with pleasing designs and figure sculptures representing the *Ashta-Dīkṣā*s, mythological episodes like the Rāmāyana, etc. The centres of the ceilings bear medallions inset in gracefully worked squares and also the figures of Virabhadra and Tāṇḍavāśvara. The smaller ceilings which are all deep like the larger ones bear low padma pendants inset in circular lotuses, śrīchakras, octagons, stars, etc.

Each vestibule doorway has its jambs carved with vertical bands of minute floral, scroll, medallion and indented pilaster ornamentation. The lintel stones have eaves-shaped cornices bearing turrets and medallions. The ceilings of the vestibules are raised each on two sets of corner stones with a multi-petalled padma pendant in the centre.

The doorways of the cells are similar to the vestibule doorways in their workmanship. The north cell is empty. In the south cell there is a linga on a round pedestal.

VIRABHADRA TEMPLE.

From the inscription Kadūr 149 standing in front of the temple it would appear that this temple was constructed in 1205 A.D. by one Haraha Sāhani. Therein he is said to have set up the History.

Trimūrti god Ballēśvara. There are three cells in the temple and there is no linga in any of them. The eastern and western cells have the images of Virabhadra, while in the north cell there is a set of metallic images. It is reported that the main linga of the temple which was originally enshrined in the western cell was lost at some period and that the present main image of Virabhadra after whom the temple has derived its name was brought from some other temple at the place and installed here

Architecturally the structure appears to have been built in two periods which, however, do not appear to be far removed from each other. The eaves and outer walls of the western cell form a distinct group.

The outer walls of the western cell as also those of the other compartments are raised on a basement consisting of four indented cornices of which the third from the bottom is disc-like. The walls are relieved by right-angled pilasters, those of the western cell being better worked and more ornamented than those on the outer walls of the other compartments. It is only on the outer walls of the western cell that we find small wall images standing under kalasa-bearing niches. Among these wall images we may mention the following: Lady chāmaradhārīnī, Janārdana, Kēśava and lady attendants, Sadāsiva and lady attendants, Brahma, and again lady attendants.

The eaves of the western cell are straight-sided and relieved at intervals by upward dental mouldings. The eaves of the other compartments are a little sloping. The brick and mortar parapet

The entrance to the temple is through a porch on the south. On either side of the porch are two beautifully carved railings which appear definitely to have belonged to some earlier temple at the place. The life and movement depicted in the sculptures carved on the inner faces of these railings suggest that the railings hail from c. 900 A.D. and the features are akin to those of the sculptures at Bādāmi and Ellora.

On the inner face of the eastern railing is represented, in bold relief, a Natarāja group (Pl. XII, 2). The god has modest ornamentation on the body and wears jatamakuta and yaññōpavīta. He dances vigorously in the air, while below him and to his left are the attendant figures consisting of a drummer playing on a pot-drum, a piper playing on an instrument which looks very much like a nāgasvaram (the occurrence of such an instrument so early is interesting), a lady cymbalist with her upper body bare, and a pot-bellied Yaksha holding a cobra. Śiva is four-handed with chinmudrā, trident, crossed arm and kapāla. The drapery and girdle are gracefully worked. The edge of the railing to the left of the group is carved with the figure of an open mouthed and trunked makara in the attitude of swooping upon a yālī. On the head of the makara and holding its coiled trunk there is seated a two-handed figure and further up there is an obscene group.

On the inner face of the western railing is depicted the Trivikramāvatāra of Vishnu (Pl. XII, 3) To the right, king Bali is making the gift by pouring the dhārā water on the hands of Vāmana who is depicted here as a Brahmanachārīn with kaupīna, yajñōpavīta, and śikhā He is standing under an umbrella To the left of this group is represented the Trivikrama form of Vishnu He is four-handed with lump(?), prayōgachakra, śankha, and stretched arm. Parallel to the stretched arm the left leg of the god is also stretched upwards towards the Brahmālōka on the one hand and also towards the gigantic head of king Bali on the other Underneath the stretched leg, Garuda is shown in the attitude of forcibly bringing a demon as captive To the extreme right of the railing is represented a swooping makara in the attitude of having swallowed a yāli. On the trunk of the makara is seated a two-handed figure. At the top of the railing are represented three flying figures, two male and one female, as entering the open mouth of a gigantic lion

The porch is edged by stone benches having railings The two front pillars are bell-shaped The ceiling is delicately carved with minute ornamental figure sculptures of the Ashta-dikpālas and marching warriors, dancing groups, etc On a square medallion in the centre is carved Natarāja

The four central pillars of the navaranga are bell-shaped and are skilfully carved with pleasing mouldings and beaded hangings as in the pillars of the Tripurāntakēśvara temple at Belgāmī The central ceiling is more elaborately carved than the ceiling of the porch.

The doorway of the western cell is a good piece with nicely worked vertical bands of floral, scroll and other ornamentation on the jambs and with a Gajalakshmi group on the lintel The ceiling of the garbhagriha is simple in design but pleasing in its detail. It has the representation of the corn of the lotus in the centre

The image of Virabhadra which is about 3½ feet high stands under a kīrtimukha holding sword and shield in the two hands The other image of Virabhadra in the eastern cell is smaller in size and inferior in workmanship.

CHANDIKĒŚVARA TEMPLE

This temple stands near the village entrance and consists actually of two linga shrines with a common mantapa in front which, at present, is partitioned into two by the construction of a rubble wall in the middle The linga in the south cell is called Chandikēśvara by the villagers. The outer walls are plain excepting only for the right-angled pilasters relieving them at intervals The pillars are, as usual, of the bell-shaped and lathe-turned variety. There are no figure sculptures in the temple

MALLĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

This village is small and insignificant and situated at a distance of about 5½ miles to the south of Tarikere. There are three old inscriptions at the place referring to two Śiva temples built during the 13th century. One of them is the Mallēśvara temple which stands to the north-east of the village.

Situation and history The temple is a low roofed building of no architectural merit. The outer walls are of mud and the doorways, pillars and ceilings are of pot-stone. The doorways are simple in design, though Hoysala in character. The pillars are Dravidian in style with cubical, eight-sided and sixteen-fluted mouldings. The ceilings consist of plain slabs. The linga inside the garbhagriha is low, being about a foot in height including the pedestal.

General description

RUINED TEMPLE

To the north of the village near a peepul tree there stood another temple of Śiva. Since it became completely ruined, the villagers have constructed another building with mud walls and country tiles. There are only the old linga and two inscriptions belonging to the ancient days.

Shingapura.

YŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE

In the 'bechurak' village of Shingāpura which lies overgrown with jungle at a distance of about two miles to the north-west of Ranganahalli, a railway station on the Tarikere-Narasimharājapura line, there stands the dilapidated Yōgānarasimha temple which appears to belong to the 14th century A.D.

Situation and history The outer walls of the temple which are built of soap-stone slabs are plain except for the right-angled pilasters relieving them here and there. They are raised on a basement consisting of three plain cornices the last of which from the bottom has been ornamented with a row of dentil cuttings. On the outer walls of the garbhagriha, there are not only the right-angled pilasters but also medallions and a few figure sculptures between the pilasters. The eaves are slightly sloping and plain. The parapet above is also plain and about a foot in height. The tower which is of stone rises in the form of a bulbous dome over a square pyramidal tier.

The front of the temple has completely collapsed. In addition to the square garbhagriha, sukhanāsi and navaranga there appear to have been originally a wide porch and an open mantapa in front as also a mahādvāra with a mantapa to the south-east. The mahādvāra and the mantapa are now in ruins. The open mantapa had a flight of steps on the east which was supported by elephants on either side.

Only the right jamb of the navaranga doorway is existing now. On it are carved the sculptures of a Vaishnava dvārapāla and an erect seven-hooded cobra.

Navaranga

The four central pillars of the navaranga are Dravidian in type. Each of them has two cubical mouldings, one on either side of a sixteen-fluted shaft having an octagonal band in the middle. The central ceiling of the navaranga is divided into nine panels with a padma in each panel.

Against the south-west wall of the navaranga is placed on a pedestal an Ugra-Narasimha image which is carved under a well-worked simhalalāta. The image may have originally been existing on the east face of the projection of the tower over the vestibule.

Inside the garbhagriha is seated on a Garuda pedestal an image of Yōgānara-

Sompura

PRASANNA SŌMĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The Prasanna Sōmēśvara temple at Sōmpura has been described in the Annual Report of the Department for 1926. The inscriptions which refer to the temple are of the 13th century and they record only grants to the institution. There is no indication therein as to when exactly the temple was built or by whom it was constructed.

Date of temple

Architecturally, however, the temple appears to have been built in two stages.

The two stages.

The earlier stage of the building appears to comprise of the garbhagriha, sukhanāsi and navaranga with possibly a porch in front. The later stage appears to be represented by the mukhamantapa only with its ornamental Hoysala-Dravidian pillars. The mukhamantapa appears to have been constructed during the 14th century. The main temple which has an ornamental frieze of rhomboidal flowers in the middle of its outer walls, suggests affinity with the late Chālukya temples and may therefore be assigned to about the 12th century A.D.

The garbhagriha and navaranga are square in plan and have flattened sides.

Navaranga pillars

The pillars of the navaranga are of the bell-shaped and lathe-turned variety. The pillars of the porches on the east and south are also bell-shaped, but on their disc, bell and vase mouldings appear the scroll, the bead, the chain and the medallion ornamentation with beaded and garland hangings on the bell

Each of the pillars of the mukhamantapa has two cubical mouldings between which the shaft is sixteen-sided and secured by three octagonal bands ornamented with floral and other designs. On the cubical mouldings appear low relieves of scroll designs and of peacocks

The parapet of the temple has several minarets and is provided with conduits of the plantain bud shape. On the tower are found several small arches which indicate Moslem influence. Thus the parapet and the tower, though of stone, cannot have been constructed earlier than the 15th or 16th century.

During the course of repairs to the temple several metallic objects were discovered in the double roof of the temple. They were examined and a photograph of them was taken. Among them there are ornamental lamp-stands and some vessels

THE BĀLABASAVAS.

In a village called Mantragatta, at a distance of about 2½ miles north-west of Chennagiri, there is a sect called the Bālabasavas among the Adī-Karnātakas, whose profession it is to wander from village to village singing, in their way, the lyrics of early bards. Though ostensibly they profess not to collect alms, verily they are accompanied by one or two of their kinsmen who invariably collect them while the Bālabasavas appear to move about unmindful.

The sect

From their very birth they are dedicated to the Lingadharmā, that is the worship of Lord Śiva. They are the disciples of Gōṇī-basavēśvara of Karlahalli in the Dhārwar district. Clad in a conventional dress which will be presently described, the Bālabasavas, when on tour, begin by invoking Śiva, Rudra, the several Basavas, the Siddhas, etc., in long notes to the accompaniment of the nāga-tambūra they carry. The tambūra has four wires which are all tuned to the same note and the wires are beaten with the right middle finger as the lyrics are sung. After the invocation, the Viraśaiva tatvas are sung.

long coat; conical cap of leather with embossed figures of the linga, Sun, Crescent and Nandi; linga enshrined in a leather bag, rudrāksha necklaces, brass bracelets, armlet of peacock feather on the right arm; jingles on both the arms, rings, etc. On the right fore-finger two rings are worn one of them has the figure of Nandi on its boss and the other has the linga. The ear pendants consist of rudrāksha drops attached to a silver sheet shaped like the hood of a cobra. Two brass rattles are worn on the left thumb to measure time while singing. A staff is held in the left hand, while the tambūra is played with the right. Over the long coat, variously coloured long flowing garments are also worn, two red cloaks are worn, one in the upavīta mode and the other in the prāchīnāvīta mode. Cotton bags are suspended at the left wristlet. The forehead, nose, eyelashes and temples are all daubed with the sacred ash, while on the eyebrows and in the middle of the forehead red sandal paste is smeared.

PART IV—NUMISMATICS.

During the year under report the Śātavāhana and other coins discovered at the Chandravalli excavations were studied and a draft catalogue thereof was prepared. The latter is being revised and it is hoped to publish it in a subsequent report.

Among the several coins received from private parties for examination and return may be mentioned a set received from Mr M Bharat Kiri, B A, of Tellichery. The set consisted of sixty coins of miscellaneous description as follows—

Among the coins, two are of silver and the rest of copper. Of the two silver coins, the larger one with the mosque of Madina on its obverse is foreign. The smaller coin is of Hyderabad. The copper coins belong to the well-known types of the 18th and 19th centuries

PART V—MANUSCRIPTS.

THE DYNASTY OF KALALE

(Pl XIII, 1).

INTRODUCTORY

This is a paper manuscript obtained for study and review from Mr K Rangaswamy Iyengar of Kalale (Najañgud Taluk, Mysore District). It contains 29 leaves of foolscap quarto size, stitched and cloth-bound. The frontispiece (Pl XIII, 2) contains a free-hand drawing in ink representing the Mysore King Krishnarāja Odeyar II as seated on throne attended by a chāmara-bearer to right, with Dalvoy Dēvarājayya and Karāchuri Nañjarājayya seated on the ground in front. The plate bears the title: ‘Karnātaka Samsthānadallī kīrti padadantha punya-sarīragalu’ (the gifted personages that attained fame in the Karnātaka country). Below the figures of the King, the Dalvoy and his brother, are written their names in Kannada. All the figures wear pagadis on head, while the Dalvoy and his brother are represented as wearing long coats and necklaces in addition to sword-bearing girdles. The Dalvoy and the Rāja both hold flowers in their right hands. The manuscript proper begins from the third leaf from where the written leaves are all numbered in the margin and are written on both the sides. Each side has about 15 lines of Kannada prose on the average. The writing is generally easy to read in spite of there being some times over-writings, deletions and erasures of lines and words, not to speak of the inter-lineal and marginal additions and later insertions from a different hand here and there.

The paper used is hand made and the sheets have water marks consisting of lines, designs and legends. The lines are clear, but the designs are not always quite clear, being mostly at the back of the bound manuscript. The designs consist of flower, animal or ornamental figures with or without legend as follows —

The paper

- 1 Creepers disposed like a shield and arranged in pairs symmetrically on either side of a panel in the midst of which appears the figure of what looks like a soaring bird. Below and above there are two star-shaped ornaments while at the top is an open flower. Underneath the design occurs the legend ‘N O T A R O’
2. A prancing humpless short-horned bull below which occurs the legend ‘F B’

3 An ornamental two-footed cucumber-shaped casket or vase with a spear-like short knob at the top. In the middle of the design appears the legend 'G'
O F

4 A ridden reined charger with a warrior seated on it in the attitude of charging with his lance like Alexander No legend

5 A prancing stag No legend

Some of the sheets bear the one or the other of the following legends, but without any design C O S T A, ^{A G}_C One of the leaves has the numeral figure '4' in a corner

The quality of the paper is akin to that of the paper used in the case of the manuscript of Peixoto,* though the water marks appearing there are different. Since, on the one hand, the account of the present Kalale manuscript stops short with the accession of Krishnarāja Wadiyar III in 1799 A D, and on the other, the language of the manuscript does not show any traces of being influenced by the English language, it appears very probable that the manuscript was produced in 1799 A D or shortly after It may however be noted that the author has not named himself.

But certain factors contribute to suggest that the manuscript is merely a draft

Later scrutiny meant perhaps to be copied some time later after making the necessary corrections, etc. The corrections, in some cases, have been made by the author himself by overwriting on the lines and words, particularly when dates have been mentioned for the closing of reigns There are also a few interlineal additions here and there In two or three places some blank space seems to have been deliberately left out in the first instance and later filled in, though not completely, by insertion, in a different hand, of Sanskrit verses with explanation in Kannada prose eulogising some of the notable Dalvoys In one case there is a guiding note† for the copyist or the reader to the effect that the matter written a little further on has to be read along with some other matter as indicated Further in a third hand and more recent ink there are some marginal notes Such corrections and additions could not naturally be avoided inasmuch as the manuscript purposed to cover a pretty long period of two hundred years Though the facts stated conformed mostly to the family tradition, the dates and, in some cases, the names had perhaps to be verified with reference to the other sources And it may be remarked here that it is only these corrected dates in most of the cases that tally with the dates mentioned in the Annals of the Mysore Royal Family and elsewhere. In a few cases, indeed, differences can be noted ; but these will be dealt with in the comparative footnotes at pertinent places under the text of the manuscript

With regard to the contents, the purpose of the author has been mainly, as suggested by the title, to trace the genealogy and achievements of the Kalale Chiefs from the time they became the Dalvoys at the Mysore Royal Court. The assignment of the wars according to the reigns is generally correct in the manuscript. Some of the wars mentioned by the manuscript but not supported by the Annals, are corroborated by Wilks and others on other grounds. For details see the footnotes under the text. But the manuscript presumes that the Kalale family took part in all the military campaigns of the Mysore kings, so that in a few cases, particularly those pertaining to earlier periods, wars which could not have been fought by the Dalvoys have been fathered on them. Thus though we know as a matter of fact that the first Dalvoy was appointed in 1616 by Rāja Odeyar, he has been stated to have won for his king even the wars that were waged, according to the Annals of the Mysore Royal Family, a decade earlier.

Another statement made in the manuscript is that there was an agreement between Rāja Odeyar of Mysore and Karikāla Mallarāja

Agreement between the chiefs of Mysore and Kalale

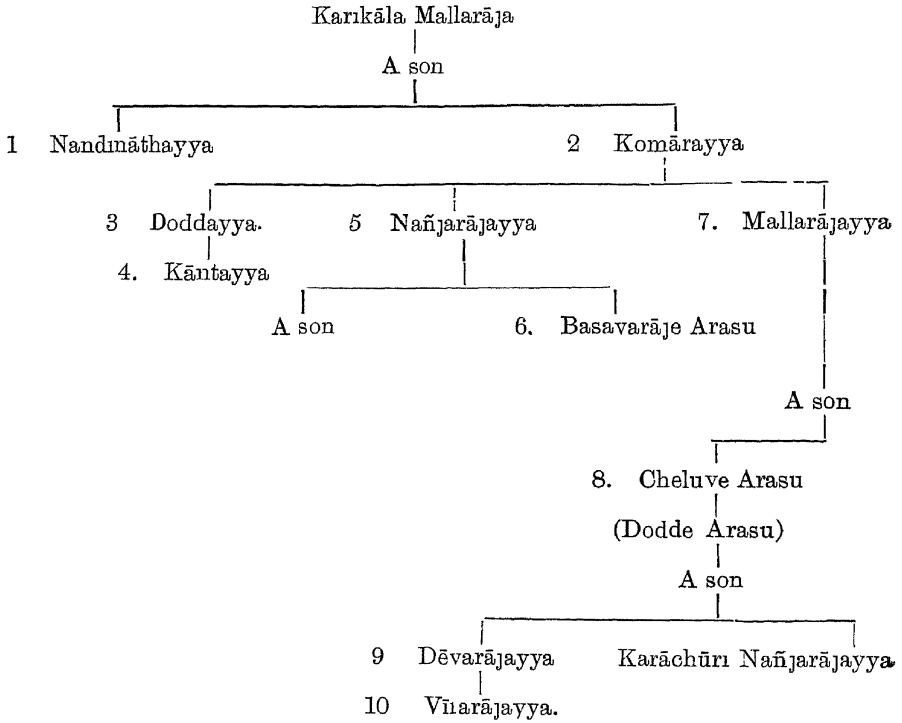

Odeyar of Kalale about the hereditary Dalvoyship of the Kalale family. But the accounts of the Annals in this respect differ and the fact of there having been any agreement as alleged by the manuscript is not supported by any evidence earlier than 1758 A.D. The Chikadēvarāja Vamśāvali written about 60 years earlier is quite silent about it. It is however true that from the time of Komārāyya (c. 1638) more and more members of the Kalale family held the office. When Karāchūri Nañjarājāyya of Kalale and his elder brother Dalvoy Dēvarājāyya were most influential with the reigning king Krishnarāja II who was the son-in-law of Karāchūri Nañjarājāyya, the office was considered as hereditary and a 'bhāshā-patra' to that effect was recorded (see Nanjangud 267 and 268). It is, perhaps, this evidence that has prompted Rice and Wilks to believe in the traditional account. Another manuscript named the Mysore-Doregala-Pārampare Kaifiyat of c. 1799 (M.A.R. 1936, pages 54-58) also mentions the agreement. But the foot-notes given further on under the different Dalvoys witness to the contrary. The Dalvoyship was first conferred by Rāja Odeyar upon Kankāla Mallarāja of Kalale who was his sister's son. But the latter is said in the Annals to have become indifferent and to have returned the signet of the office with his grandson Nandināthayya who was a mere boy. Thereupon the king, becoming dissatisfied at the conduct of his nephew, appointed Bettada Arasu in the place. Nandināthayya is not at all mentioned in the Annals as having held the post at any time, while the present manuscript states that he held it during at least three generations of Mysore rulers from the time of Rāja Odeyar. During the reign of Kanthīrava Narasarāja Odeyar as many as eight Dalvoys are mentioned in the Annals, while the Kalale manuscript mentions only Komārayya. Further the name of Vikramarāja who is well-known to have been the Dalvoy at the Mysore Court under Rāja Odeyar II does not at all occur in the manuscript, while an inscription at Nanjangud (Nj. 9) mentions him as the Dalvoy. Dalvoy Komārayya is said in the Annals (p. 95) to have been the last of a series of six Dalvoys who served during the reign of Doddā-Dēva-Rāja Odeyar. In the Annals (p. 156) a list of three people of the Kallahalli family who served as Dalvoys during the reign of Kanthīrava II is furnished, while in the manuscript these three people have been mistaken for members of the Kalale family (see note 43). The name of Dalvoy Virarāja, father of Dēvarāja and Karāchūri Nāñjarāja is omitted in the list of the Dalvoys furnished by the manuscript. But according to the Annals, he is known to have held the post

As regards the mention of the several reigns of the Mysore kings, the manuscript generally supports the details given in the Annals and other books, while the name of Rāja Odeyar II is mentioned as Chāmarāja Odeyar II. The reign of Dēvarāja Odeyar (II) uncle of Chikadēvarāja Odeyar, which has been omitted in the Annals and the books of Rice, Wilks, etc., is also omitted in the manuscript. The dates mentioned for the several reigns and sometimes corrected by overwriting are in general agreement with the dates given in the Annals and other books. The few differences, here and there, are noted in the footnotes under the text, as for instance, the discrepancy with regard to the date 1771 given for the death of Chāmarāja Odeyar, successor of Nāñjarāja Odeyar (son of Kṛishnarāja Odeyar II)

The genealogy of the Kalale chiefs from the time of Karikāla Mallarāja Odeyar, is as follows according to the manuscript —

Kalale chiefs

With this genealogy we may compare the one furnished by the inscriptions Yedatore 58, dated in 1741, and T-Narasipuri 36, dated in 1748

It may be noticed that Virarāja, father of Dalvoy Dēvarāja, and son of Dodde Arasu or Doddayya is not named in the manuscript. Dodde-Arasu or Doddayya is wrongly mentioned in the manuscript as the son of Cheluve Arasu (No 8), while the inscriptions mention Śrīkānta as his father. The Nañjarāja Yāsōbhūshana (Gaekwad Oriental Series, No XLVII, vi) which is a champu work of the time of Karāchūn Nañjarāja gives the following genealogy and supports the evidence of the inscriptions —

Referring now to the genealogy of the manuscript, we can at once see the mistake committed therein by looking at the names of the ancestors of Dalvoy Dēvarāja (No 9). His father (i.e., Virarāja—not named) was a son of Dodde Arasu, who is not mentioned as a Dalvoy. The latter's father is said to be Cheluve Arasu which is of course a mistake in view of the evidence of the inscriptions, as said above, and the evidence of the champu work Nañjarāja Yāsōbhūshana. The name must be Muppina Kānta or Śrīkānta whose father was Timmarāja and grandfather Karikāla Mallarāja. But the manuscript names the great grandfather of Dodde-Arasu simply as Dalvoy Mallarājayya and names the latter's great grandfather as Karikāla Mallarāja, mentioning him as a contemporary of Rāja Odeyar of Mysore. Thus according to the manuscript, there were nine generations from Karikāla Mallarāja to Dalvoy Dēvarāja, while according to the inscriptions and the champu work mentioned above, the generations were six only. Hence we have to conclude that the genealogy furnished by the manuscript is faulty, for the evidence of the inscriptions and of the champu work cannot both be wrong. The genealogy furnished in the Vēnupurāda Kshatriya Vamsāvalī (Cat. of the Govt Or Lib K B 424) makes clear the mistake committed in the manuscript. According to it Karikāla Mallarāja had three sons, viz., (1) Mallarāja, (2) Timmarāja and (3) Nañjarāja. Among the five sons of (1), were the Dalvoys Nandināthayya and Komārāyya, while Dalvoy Doddayya was the son of Muppina-Kānta and grandson of Timmarāja (2). Thus Komārāyya and Dalvoy Doddayya were cousins, but not father and son, though Komārāyya is stated in the manuscript to have had a son named also Doddayya. According to the Vēnupurāda Kshatriya Vamsāvalī, Komārāyya is stated to have had two sons called Dodda Mallarājayya and Chikka Mallarājayya, but the manuscript mentions three sons, of whom the last is named Dalvoy Mallarājayya and is mentioned wrongly as the great grandfather of Dalvoy Doddayya, who appears to have been in fact his uncle.

Thus the genealogy furnished by the manuscript cannot be reconciled with that of the inscriptions or other source books. The dates and events mentioned are generally in agreement with known facts, though in a few cases pertaining to earlier periods some discrepancies have been noted. The manuscript may therefore be regarded as a version of family tradition recorded in c. 1799 and having its own obvious faults. At any rate, some of the events mentioned in it find corroboration elsewhere, though they may have been omitted in the Annals. The touch of romance introduced between the Padshah's (i.e. Aurangzeb's) daughter and Dalvoy Doddayya appears to be a matter of pure family tradition, not supported anywhere else.

Importance

KARIKĀLA MALLARĀJA ODEYAR¹

Formerly while Karikāla Mallarāja Odeyar was the crowned chief of Kalale ruling over a country fetching a revenue of about 40,000 gadyānas, Rāja Odeyar of Mysore was ruling in peace a country consisting of 33 villages and yielding a revenue of over 25,000 gadyānas. At Seringapatam was ruling Śrī Ranga Rāya² who had made himself so powerful that Rāja Odeyar³ of Mysore befriended him against the neighbouring Pāleyagārs who had, at this time, become turbulent and troublesome.

Śrī Ranga Rāya of Seringapatam suffered from carbuncle some time later. No treatment was effective, on the other hand the disease became gradually aggravated. Śrī Ranga Rāya felt that he could get rid of it only by offering worship to the gods and decided upon going on pilgrimage to Tirumakūḍlu and other holy places and paying obeisance to the Pañcha-lingas at Talkād. He considered that even if he should die while on pilgrimage, his life would at least serve its purpose.

Srī Ranga Raya

1 Regarding the genealogy of the Kalale chiefs see Introduction

2 Elsewhere mentioned as Tirumala Raya (Rice' Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions, p. 127, Wilks' History of Mysore, Vol I, p. 27)

3 But see the Annals of the Mysore Royal Family, pp. 21ff. It was Rāja Odeyar who was one of the most powerful rulers at the time, he had even worsted Śrī Ranga Raya more than once in battle.

Thus looking out for a friend who could take charge of the administration of his kingdom during his absence, he sent for Rāja Odeyar of Raja Odeyar.

Mysore and made over Seringapatam to his charge.¹ While doing so he said that Rāja Odeyar might govern the country so long as he remained on pilgrimage, that is, till his disease was cured and he would be able to return, but in the event of his death, he said that the country might be handed over to his cousin, the chief of Ummattūr²

Śrī Ranga Rāya set out on pilgrimage, but only to die soon after Thereupon

The Ummattur Chief

Rāja Odeyar strengthened himself at Seringapatam and even ascended the throne there on Thursday, the tenth lunar day of the dark half of Māgha in the year Sauṇya, Saka 1535.³ At this the Ummattur chief sent messengers to him, entreating him to make over Seringapatam to him inasmuch as he happened to be the cousin of Śrī Ranga Rāya But Rāja Odeyar evaded the demand, professing friendship at first, but asserting later that Seringapatam was given to him alone The chief of Ummattūr was weak and hence made efforts to secure the possession of Seringapatam by seeking the aid of the neighbouring Pāleyagārs powerful Kalale chief, Kārikāla Mallarāja Odeyar, who was an enemy of the Ummattūr chief⁴ and had the support of his father-in-law, the Yalandūr chief, who was the lord of an extensive territory⁵ With his help he further thought of subduing the neighbouring Pāleyagārs also and acquiring their provinces Karikāla Mallarāja was thus sent for and with several persuasions and promises was won over to his side A written agreement⁶ was entered into with him in front of his family deity Chāmundi to the effect that so long as the two dynasties endured the descendants of Mallarāja should hold sway as the Dalvoys of the Mysore Royal Court while the descendants of Rāja Odeyar should rule over Mysore It was further agreed that they should together strive to retain Seringapatam without making it over to

On hearing the news, Rāja Odeyar planned to make an alliance with the

1 Of this transaction it is said that foreseeing his inevitable subjugation by Rāja Odeyar, he made a virtue of necessity in retiring voluntarily (Mysore Gazetteer, Vol V, p 808)

2 Cp Wilks' History of Mysore, Vol I, p 27, Mysore Gazetteer, Vol V, p 861

3 8th February 1610 A D This date is given for the acquisition of Seringapatam in the Annals (p 45) while the date of the accession is stated as 21st March 1610, about a month and a half later

4 The rivalry between the Ummattur and Kalale chiefs was well known For details see the MSS Venupurada Kshatriya Vamsavali (Cat of Govt Or Lib K B 424) It is said that one of the Ummattur chiefs put an end to all the members of the Kalale family, excepting only a child named Mallaraja (i.e. Karikala Mallaraja) who was the nephew (sister's son) of Rāja Odeyar of Mysore Cp Annals, p 47

5 Cp Venupurada Kshatriya Vamsavali (Cat of Govt Or Lib K B 424) for details

6 For the agreement see Introduction.

the Ummattūr chief and should also curb the neighbouring Pāleyagārs Nandinātha Arasu, grandson of Karikāla Mallaiāja, was accordingly appointed the Dalvoy on the tenth lunar day of the bright half of Mārgaśīra in the year Nala¹ (8th December 1616 A D.)

NANDINĀTHAYYA.

Nandināthayya now led the combined armies of Kalale and Mysore against the neighbouring powers² He defeated and subdued the chiefs of Bannūr, Talkād, Mūgūr, Hullahallī, Bīlkere, Heggadadēvanakōte, Kattamalalavādi, etc In the meantime Karāchūr Nāñjaiāyaya³ and the people of Hāgalavādi were creating disturbance with the support of the people of Madura They were all vanquished by Nandināthayya who further marched against and conquered Satyāgāla, Ummattūr and Haradanahallī, plundering their elephants and cavalry. Yalandūr was, however, bestowed upon Rāma Rāja Rāya. The chief of Tagadūr was given protection. All the previous gifts in the country to the temples, Brahmins, etc, were maintained and standardised

On the 13th day of the dark half of Jyēshtha in the year Paingala, Śaka 1543 (mistake for 1540) Rāja Odeyar died after having reigned at Seringapatam for eight years⁴ On the tenth lunar day of the bright half of Āshādha of the same year⁵ Dalvoy Nandināthayya and others crowned at Seringapatam Chāmarāja Odeyar, son of Naiasarāja Odeyar and grandson of Rāja Odeyar During his reign Dalvoy Nandināthayya conquered Maddūr and Chennapatna Bhāra Nāyaka, Sāla Nāyaka, Bēlūr Krishnappa Nāyaka and others formed a confederacy and marched

1 The Annals pp (45-48) give a different account Nandinathayya is not mentioned as having been appointed Dalvoy (see Introduction) Between the years 1616 and 1637 A D four officers are mentioned as having held the post Bettada Ariasu, Bannur Linganna, Basavalinganna and Vikramaraya The last was a son of Chamaraja Odeyar and continued as the Dalvoy at the court of Raja Odeyar II also, but he was dismissed during the time of Kanthiava Narasaraaja (see Annals)

2 Cp Annals, p 43 for the conquests All the places are included excepting only Tagadur and Hagalavadi But it would appear that Bannur was conquered in 1606, Yelandur and Satyagala in 1608, Ummattur in 1614 and the other places in 1615, so that it cannot be true that they were conquered by Nandinathayya, if we have to believe the account of the Annals as well as the MSS that the first Dalvoy was appointed by Raja Odeyar in 1616 A D

3 Chief of Alambadi, ibid p 44 From him Satyagala is said to have been conquered against him, but the Dalvoy defeated them and conquered Chennarāyapatna and other places. Having plundered all their insignia he built out of them an armoury.

On the 15th lunar day of the bright half of Vaiśākha in the year Īśvara, Śaka 1561 (mistake for 1559) Chāmarāja Odeyar died² having

His conquests during the reign of Chamaraja II. ruled for 20 years. He was succeeded by his son Chāmarāja Odeyar II³ who was crowned by Dalvoy Nandināthayya and other notables at Seringapatam. During his reign Nandināthayya⁴ defeated Krishnappa Nāyaka of Arkalgūd and wrested from him a large sum of money, elephants and horses, making him also a vassal of the kingdom.⁵ Likewise many other chiefs were compelled to pay tributes to Mysore and to make over their birudas like the Hanuma and Garuda staves, conch, discus, makara, thekke, simhalalāta, etc., to the Mysore King.

On the first lunar day of the bright half of Āśvayuja in Bahudhānya Śaka 1562 (mistake for 1560) Chāmarāja II died after having ruled for a year and a half.⁶ He was succeeded on the throne by Kanthirava Narasarāja Odeyar, son of Bettada Chāmarāja Odeyar who was the younger brother of Rāja Odeyar.⁷ Some days after the coronation Dalvoy Nandināthayya died.

KOMARAYYA

The King now appointed his younger brother Komāre Arasu (called also Komārayya) as the Dalvoy.⁸ At this time the Bijapur general Ranadulla Khān invaded Seringapatam with a large army. But Dalvoy Komārayya drove him out with his army.

1 See Annals, pp 50-52, for the conquests. Excepting Maddur, Chennapatna and Chennarayapatna, the other places are not mentioned in the manuscript. The conquest of Tagadu accomplished in 1626 A.D. is attributed in the manuscript to the reign of Raja Odeyar. There is no mention in the Annals of the confederacy formed by Bhairu Nayaka and others. The construction of the armoury is attributed to the reign of Kanthirava Narasaraja (ibid p 79).

2 It is said in the Annals that on this date Chamaraja Odeyar crowned Raja Odeyar II as king and died three days later.

3 Named Raja Odeyar II elsewhere.

4 But see Annals, p 64. The Dalvoy was Vikramaraya.

5 Cp ibid, p 63. The only conquest mentioned is that of Arkalgud.

6 28th Sept 1638 A.D. The date given in the Annals is 15 days later.

7 The date given in the MSS corresponds to 28th Sept 1638. But cp Annals, p 65. The date given there corresponds to 13th Nov 1638.

8 As many as eight Dalvoys are mentioned in the Annals, p 94. But the name of Komarayya does not occur, while that of Vikramaraya is omitted in the MSS. See also Ep Car III, Nj 9 of 1643 which mentions Dalvoy Vikramaraya.

pursuing him to a great distance from the capital¹ He then proceeded to Periyāpatna, besieged and conquered it with rich spoil From there he marched against Virappa Nāyaka of Madura and subdued him The territories of Satyamangala, Danāyakanakōte, etc, were annexed and the brūdas of the several chiefs were wrested from them

Being pleased with him on his return to Seringapatam, the King conferred on him the title 'Pararāja haṁṁa Śāidūla' and presented him

Further conquests. with various precious jewels, etc The Dalvoy next conquered Yelavanka-nād and besieged Māgadi² whose chief Chikka Kempe Gauda sought his protection by paying tribute Kallūr, Kadaba, Turuvekere, Māyisamudra and other places were then annexed to Mysore The minor chiefs were all subdued as also the chiefs of Maleyāla and the Konkan Sameti Rangappa Nāyaka was offered protection and bestowed Ratnagiri, while Srī Ranga Rāya was promised support

Thus did Dalvoy Komārāyya rise to fame, when on the first lunar day of the bright half of Bhādrapada in the year Vikārī, Śaka 1582,

Dodda Devaraja Kanthirava Vira Narasarāja Odeyar passed away, having ruled for 22 years³ He was succeeded by Dodda Dēvarāja Odeyar, son of the younger queen of Dēvarāja Odeyar who was a son of Bōla Chāmarasa Odeyar⁴

Now Śivappa Nāyaka of Keladi made all the necessary preparations for a war and besieged Seringapatam But Dalvoy Komārāyya Defeat of Keladi marched with all the army against him and totally routed his forces, cutting off the noses of many and looting elephants, horses, etc Lakshmappa Nāyaka of Narasimhapūr (Hole-Narasīpur) who had come to give aid to Śivappa was beaten and humbled, while all his belongings were plundered and Narasimhapūr itself was taken.

1 For details see Annals, pp 72-76, the name of Komārāyya does not appear

2 Cp the list given in the Annals, p 68ff Excepting the reduction of the Magadi Chief and of Maleyāla and the Konkan, the other conquests are mentioned But Wilks (Hist of Mys Vol I, pp 33-35) has mentioned the reduction of the Magadi chief

3 Śaka 1581, not 1582 The date is 9th Aug 1659 A D But in the Annals, p 95, the date given corresponds to 17th July 1659, and Dodda Devaraja Odeyar is said to have come to the throne on Bhādrapada su 10 in Vikārī

4 Dodda Devaraja Odeyar was the third son of Muppina Devaraja and Devajammanni, Annals, p 95 Muppina Devaraja was the son of Bola Chamaraja (Wilks' Hist of, Mys Vol I, p 35)

5 A series of six Dalvoys are mentioned in the Annals p 103, of whom Kalale Komārāyya was the last The conquests of the reign are detailed on p 97, ibid and Wilks, op cit p 37 The siege of Seringapatam by Keladi Śivappa Nāyaka and the capture of Narasimhapura by the Mysore Dalvoy are not mentioned in the Annals, while Wilks mentions them

The chief of Arkalgūd submitted and was given protection on his agreeing to pay tribute annually. The territories of Śivappa Nāyaka

Extension of territory. of Keladi—like Sakrepatna, Vasudhāre, Hāssan, etc.,—were annexed. Chikkanāyakanahalli, which belonged to the Muhammadan rulers of Bijapur was also captured. The chiefs of Hāgalavādi and other places who came in submission professing friendship were all duly respected and sent back being offered protection. Chokka Nāyaka of Madura who offered war, was beaten and driven out of his province. His territories, namely, Erode, Vāmanūr, Dhārāpur, etc.¹ were all annexed. Trichinopoly was besieged and a large booty in the shape of horses, money and jewels was obtained from Chokkanātha Nāyaka. The precious stones thus obtained were inlaid into the sandals of the king Dodda Dēvarāja. Tributes were levied on Chīla Nāyaka and others.

A large number of gifts consisting of precious jewels, etc., were made for the god Venkatēśvara of Tirupati,² while all encouragement was given to temples and Brahmins. Thus did Dalvoy Komārayya prosper in peace and power bearing the title 'Pararāja harina Śārdūla'.

Religious gifts and peace

On the 12th (corrected into 7th) lunar day of the bright half of Phālguna in the year Paridhāvi, Śaka 1594, Dodda Dēvarāja Odeyar died having ruled for 14 years.³ He was succeeded on the throne by Srimad Rājādhirāja Rāja Paramēśvara Jagadēkarāja Praudhapratāpa Apratimavīra Kaliyuga Chakravartī Chikkadēvarāja Odeyar⁴ who was crowned at Seringapatam by Dalvoy Komārayya, Yalandūr Viśālāksha Pandit, Tirumalaiengār and others on the 12th lunar day of the bright half of Phālguna in the year Paridhāvi, Śaka 1594.

Chikkadevaraja

Dalvoy Komārayya⁵ now besieged Gaganagiridurga and demanded tribute from Chikka Kempe Gauda.⁶ But the latter offered war and was totally defeated and captured prisoner. The Pāleyagārs who had come to give him aid were all

3 18th (or 13th) Feb. 1673 A.D. But the date given in the Annals, p. 103, is Phal. su. 5.

4 Evidently the reign of Devaraja II, younger brother of Dodda Devaraja and uncle of Chikkadevaraja has been left out. See M. A. R. 1938, p. 72 for details. If, as seems almost certain, he too ruled for a time, the date of the accession of Chikkadevaraja as given in the manuscript and the Annals is bound to be incorrect.

5 A list of seven Dalvoys is given in the Annals for the reign, of whom Komarayya and Dodayya are also mentioned (p. 115).

6 For the conquests in detail see ibid. pp. 105ff., and Wilks, op. cit. pp. 101-2. The list of the MSS is very short and it refers only to Gaganagiri and Bangalore in particular.

beaten. Gaganagiri was occupied and the treasure in the palace of 'Chikka Kempe Gauda was looted. The neighbouring Pāleyagārs were subdued and made tributary.

Sahaji Rao¹ of Bangalore was next attacked and his elephants, horses and belongings were all taken possession of. Those who submitted were given protection and their birudās, insignia and tributes were accepted. Trichinopoly was then attacked and the territories within the boundary of that province were annexed².

Bangalore and Trichinopoly.

DODDAYYA

While Trichinopoly was being besieged by Komārayya, two great warriors named Jējēghāt and Dādōjighāt³ who had besieged the fort of Delhi disregarding the Pādshah (Aurangzeb) came to understand that Seringapatam was defenceless at this time since the entire Mysore army was at Trichinopoly. Believing that they could consequently capture the place with ease, they at once arrived from the north and laid siege to the fort of the capital. Chikkadēvarāja sent word to Dalvoy Komārayya asking him to return immediately. The Dalvoy, on the other hand, was determined not to show his face to his king without capturing Trichinopoly. Accordingly he appointed his son Dodde Arasu (or Doddayya) as the Dalvoy in his place and despatched him⁴ with the army to Seringapatam. Doddayya marched night and day and arrived near Kasaragere-Kottatti where Jējēghāt and Dādōjighāt were encamping. Here a severe battle ensued in which both these warriors were decapitated and their entire army was captured.⁵

When the news reached Chikkadēvarāja Odeyar, Doddayya was received in state and greatly respected. The Pādshāh of Delhi (Aurangzeb) became delighted. Since he had taken an oath to the effect that his daughter should marry no other than the person who killed those warriors,⁶ he himself came down as far as the Krishnā.

1. Cp Annals, p 110 and Wilks' Hist of Mys Vol I, pp 56-7. It would appear that Bangalore was first in the possession of the Mahatas but subsequently was occupied by Kasim Khan, the Mughal General. The Mysore king is said to have purchased the place.

2 Cp Annals, p 113

3 Ibid, pp 113-15 and Wilks, op cit pp 59-61

4 For details see Annals, p 115, and Wilks, op cit pp 60-61. What became of Komarayya at Trichinopoly is not known.

5 See Wilks, ibid, and the Annals, pp 114-115 for a graphic account of the war and the stratagem played by Dalvoy Doddayya on this occasion. The Mahrata army sent against Mysore was that of Sivaji (see Sivaji and the Mysore Raj, by Dr M. H. Krishna, Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society, Vol XXXI, Nos 3 and 4).

6 Probably an account of family tradition, not supported by other evidence. For the title conferred on the King, see Annals, pp 115, 141-46.

But he could not proceed further since the signs were inauspicious. He therefore returned to Delhi, but sent a large number of gifts and titles to Dalvoy Doddayya through his wise messengers, conferring also, at the same time, the title of 'Jagadēkarāja' on the Mysore King and entreating him to send Doddayya to him. The King, however, sent a reply to the effect that Doddayya died in war. At this the Pādshāh became extremely sorry and sent for the sword and portrait of the Dalvoy. The princess was married to the sword, and for the rest of her life she remained worshipping the portrait.

As for Dalvoy Doddayya he led an expedition into Salem, defeated Chinnama-nāyaka, and annexed the country. Likewise he annexed Further conquests.

Śankhagiri, Nāmakal, Paramati, Syādamangala and other pālyapats¹. Thus did he attain fame as a great warrior and return to Seringapatam in glory.

KANTAYYA

Some days later Dalvoy Doddayya died and the Dalvoyship was conferred upon his son Kāntayya by Chikkadēvarāja Odeyar². On the first lunar day of the bright half of Mārgasīra in the year Tārana, Śaka 1629, Chikka Dēvarāja Odeyar died, having ruled for 31 years and 20 days,³ and was succeeded on the throne by his son Mūga Kanthirava Vīra Narasarāja Odeyar.

Muga Kanthirava Narasaraja

During this period Dalvoy Kāntayya⁴ besieged Chikkaballāpur, but was killed.

Kantayya's death and defeat of Nanjarajayya

The king now appointed his father (? uncle) Nañjarājayya in his place and sent him to Chikkaballāpur. But he also was defeated, as a consequence of which he made over his office to his youngest son Basavaraje Arasu (or Basavarājayya).

1 Cp ibid, pp. 105ff. Nāmakal is omitted.

2 In the Annals Doddayya is said to have been the Dalvoy between 1682 and 1690 and to have been succeeded by four others. Kāntayya is not mentioned, but Mallarajayya, son of Kalale Kantayya is said to have been the Dalvoy between 1696 and 1698.

3 The date is 17th Nov 1704 A.D. The previous day is mentioned in the Annals, p. 154. The date mentioned by Wilks is 12th Dec of the year (op cit p 131).

4 Five Dalvoys are mentioned in the Annals, p. 156, of whom three, viz., Kāntayya, Nanjarajayya and Basavarajayya are mentioned in the MSS. But in the Annals they are said to have belonged to the Kallahalli family. Perhaps the account given in the MSS is wrong (see Introduction). According to the Venupurada Kshatriya Vamsavalī (Cat of Govt. Or Lib KB 424) Dalvoy Doddayya was the uncle of Dalvoy Kāntayya who had a son named Nanjarajayya and a brother named Basavarajayya. Dalvoy Doddayya had four sons of whom the eldest was Vīrarajayya who is said in the Annals to have also held the post of Dalvoy during the reign.

BASAVARĀJAYYA

Basavarājayya marched upon Chikkaballāpūr,¹ besieged the place, and compelled Bēchēgauda to submission and payment of a tribute. Chikkaballapur and Ikkeri humbled. The latter acknowledged the superiority of the Dalvoy and addressed him as 'Śaranāgata vajrapañjara' From thence the Dalvoy marched to the kingdom of Ikkēri whose chief was engaged in a severe war. From the battlefield at Attāvara the chief escaped on a horse but was pursued for a distance of four gāvudās and driven out. Chikkamagalūr, Mahārājanadurga, Bānāvāra and other places belonging to the province of Ikkēri were annexed. The Dalvoy did not stop here but continued annexing more places² when the chief sued for peace at the Mysore court and prayed that the Dalvoy might be recalled. Returning thus to the capital the Dalvoy lived in peace ever after.

MALLARĀJAYYA.

On the death of the Dalvoy a few days later Mūga Kanthīraṇa Vīra Narasārāja Odeyar appointed his uncle Mallarājayya³ to the post. Conquests Collecting together a large army, the latter set out on an expedition which resulted in the defeat of the Pāleyagārs of Coimbatore, Satyamangala and other places⁴ and the annexation of further territories to Mysore. The chiefs who submitted to the Dalvoy were pardoned and promised protection.

On the full moon day of Phālguna in the year Jaya, Śaka 1634, Mūga Kanthīraṇa Vīra⁵ Narasārāja Odeyar died,⁵ after having ruled for nine years. His son Dodda Krishnarāja was then crowned at Seringapatam by Dalvoy Mallarājayya⁶ and other important officers. On the death of Mallarājayya some time later, his grandson, Cheluve Arasu,⁷ was appointed the Dalvoy in his place.

1 Cp the list in the Annals, pp 156-7

2 The conquest of the provinces of Ikkeri is not mentioned by Wilks or in the Annals

3 Mallarajayya is not mentioned in the Annals, according to which p 159, Kalale Virarajayya (see note 43 above) and after him his son Devarajayya are said to have held the post of Dalvoy. However that Mallarajayya was an uncle of Basavarajayya is borne out by the genealogy mentioned in the Venupurada Kshatriya Vamsavalī (Cat. Or Lib. K. B. 424)

4. These conquests are not mentioned either by Wilks or in the Annals.

5 9th March 1715 A D. But the date given in the Annals, p 158, is about a year earlier. Cp also Wilks (op cit p. 141) the date given by him is 1714 A D

7. Not mentioned in the Annals. According to the Venupurada Kshatriya Vamsavalī (Cat. Or Lib. K B 424) Dalvoy Mallarajayya, uncle of Basavarajayya, had a son named Chikke Arasu

DEVARĀJAYYA.

Next after Cheluve Arasu, Dēvarāje Arasu (or Dēvaiājayya), the grandson of his son Dodde Arasu,¹ was appointed the Dalvoy At this time seven Sardars, namely, Kāsīm Khān, Bhārāmalla etc., began creating disturbances in the province of Mysore and even took possession of some places. They also marched upon Seringapatam with the determination of capturing it. Dalvoy Dēvarājayya met their forces near Kailancha² and gave them a severe fight in which every one of them was killed. All their treasure, elephants and horses were taken, after which the Dalvoy returned to the capital.

Kempegauḍa of Māgaḍi was next attacked. The fort was besieged and taken and the chief was compelled to submit.³ In the year Krōdhi (1724 A. D.) Divān Sādulla Khān, Siddōji Ghōrpade⁴ and others led a well-equipped army and laid siege to the fort of Seringapatam, but in just a day's fight they were all completely routed so that they had to flee in fear. Some time later in the year Parābhava (1726 A.D.)⁵ Bāji Rao of the Mahrattas led a large army and besieged Seringapatam. But a great part of his army was destroyed by the effective arms used by the Mysore forces. Bāji Rao lost courage and was only too glad to withdraw accepting what little was given him.

In the year Kilaka (1728 A. D.) the powerful and loyal Dalvoy curbed the mischiefmongers and brought about peace in the country.⁶ He even marched against Māgaḍi Kempegauḍa and annexed his kingdom on Saturday, the 5th lunar day of the dark half of Āsvayuja in the year Kilaka (12th October 1728 A. D.) The Māgaḍi chief was brought over to Seringapatam and compelled to bow down at the feet of the King.

Some days later, Dalvoy Dēvarājayya sent his brother Karāchūri Nañjarājayya in charge of the army to besiege Dēvanahalli.⁷ At this time Hyder Naik, his father Fatte Naik, his uncle Alī Naik and his brother Sābas Naik, received intelligence of the fame, magnanimity and valour of Karāchūri Nañjarājayya and left Kōlar for Sira where they stayed for some time. Then they arrived at Dēvanahalli.¹ Their wives and children had been kept under custody for non-payment of certain dues Through Mallarāje Arasu of Maddagiri they obtained a sum of 5,000 varahas² which they paid at Sira and redeemed their families Hyder Naik, whose wife and children were now sent for, was appointed in command of ten soldiers in the regiment of Katti Gōpālārāje Arasu When, after some time, Karāchūrī Nañjarājayya personally inspected the army, he promoted Hyder as a commander over fifty and sanctioned to him a house in addition to salary, providing also separately for his boarding In the year Akshaya (1746 A D) the fort of Dēvanahalli was taken and the officers returned to Seringapatam where they stayed in peace and happiness

On Sunday the 5th lunar day of the dark half of Phālguna in the year Virōdhikṛitu, Śaka 1653,³ Dodda Krishnarāja Odeyar died, having ruled for 18 years. At the moment of his death he conferred upon Dalvoy Dēvarājayya all his regal powers,⁴ placing him in charge of the whole province, treasury, etc., and directing him to crown as king one of the descendants of the royal family whom he thought fit

On the 7th lunar day of the dark half of Phalguna in the year Virōdhikṛitu, Śaka 1653,⁵ Dalvoy Dēvarājayya and the other important officers raised Chāmarāja Odeyar to the throne at Seringapatam But on Monday the 5th lunar day of the dark half of Jyēsthā in the year Ānanda, Śaka 1656, he died having ruled for just two years and three months On the same day⁷ therefore Dalvoy Dēvarājayya, Sarvādhikārī Nañjarājayya of Bangalore and other officers crowned Chikka Krishnarāja Odeyar, son of Chāme Arasu of Chikkanahalli The fort of Dēvanahalli was taken after this coronation and its siege and conquest have been mentioned above

7 15th June 1734 A D. according to the Annals, p 173

At this time the Nawabs of Savanore, Kadapa and Kurnool, accompanied by Basālat Jung, came over with their armies to Seringapatam and requested the King to send the Mysore army with them against Nasir Jung ¹ In compliance with their request the cavalry and infantry of Mysore were sent under the command of Bārakki Venkata Rao, Balapati Naik and Konda Naik Hyder Naik was also sent with Bārakki Venkata Rao in command of 50 horse and 300 foot. As a result of this military expedition the entire army of Nasir Jung broke up and fled During the plunder of the latter's treasure Hyder secured four camel loads which the Dalvoy allowed him to keep for himself ² Hyder now managed to bribe the important officers under Karāchūri Nañjarājayya and obtain his permission to augment his cavalry and infantry

With the help of the French, Chendā Khān,³ in the meanwhile, captured all the territories belonging to Trichinopoly, besieging and capturing Trichinopoly itself Muhammad Ali, therefore, sent his younger brother Mafus Khan to Dalvoy Dēvarājayya at Seringapatam with the message that he would give away the province of Trichinopoly to him and remain as his vassal if he would help him to get rid of his enemy Chendā Khān. Accordingly Dalvoy Dēvarājayya gathered together Murahari Rāya and other Pāleyagārs and sent an army consisting of 20,000 horse and one lakh foot under the command of his brother Karāchūri Nañjarājayya The latter was able to re-conquer the territories captured by Chendā Khān and approach very near Trichinopoly where he also secured the help of the British guns A great battle ensued in which Chendā Khān was unable to meet the enemy In fright, he retreated and hid himself in the temple of Jambukēśvara Nañjarājayya invaded the temple, encamping all round Muhammad Ali now appeared before him and professed to make over, as per his promise, the province of Trichinopoly Being pleased with his honesty, Nañjarājayya directed him to manage the affairs himself in his behalf till he should be able to send his own people over there.

Chendā Khān who now realised the futility of fighting the Mysore army sent his messengers to Karāchūri Nañjarājayya to say that Muhammad Ali was never to be trusted inasmuch as he would not, as a matter of fact, give away Trichinopoly as promised; while, on the other hand, he would willingly be under him if he was allowed to remain in charge of the province Assuring thus that he would no longer continue the fight, he sent away all his elephants and cavalry out of the fort, himself submitting. In the meanwhile Muhammad Ali bribed Murahari Rāya and other prominent men on the side of Karāchūri Nañjarājayya, requesting them to kill Chendā Khān. Nañjarājayya, however, would not grant this request, since he felt that both of them should be taken under his protection as they had severally submitted to him. He even thought of conferring on them jāhgirs in Mysore. But Muhammad Ali secretly bribed Mānōji, the Dalvoy of Tanjore, heavily and managed to have Chendā Khān murdered, while making over, at the same time, the fort of Trichinopoly to the charge of the English and himself going away to Chennapatna (Madras).

At this time Hyder Nāik had been allowed to augment further his troops. The title of 'Bahadūr'¹ had been conferred upon him and he had received as jāhgir Dindigal and the places lying on the borders of that province. With his help Karāchūri Nañjarājayya prolonged the siege of Trichinopoly for a period of three years, spending as much as four crores of varahas. After all, he had to abandon the siege, since his brother Dēvarājayya sent him peremptory orders to return immediately to the capital which had been besieged by Salābat Jung in the meanwhile.² On the return of Nañjarājayya, Salābat Jung saw his large army, quietly accepted the money that was paid and withdrew.³

In the year Akshaya (1746 A.D.) Dalvoy Dēvarājayya got constructed the tank called Rāmasāgara to the south of the Mahābalāchala called Rāmasāgara to the south of the Mahābalāchala. Deeds of religious merit (Chāmundi Hills) near Mysore. In Śukla (1749 A.D.) he built and endowed an agrahāra called Rāmāchandrapura near Tirumakūdlu-Narasimhapura (T.-Narasipur). In Śrīmukha (1753 A.D.) he caused to be built a bridge called Rāma's bridge across the Kapilā river in the middle of a spot called 'Mallana-mūle' at Nañjangūd. He also celebrated the tulābhāra and other gifts and thus fulfilled the religious purpose of his life.⁴ bright half of Āshādha in the same year).¹ The latter reformed the army and strengthened greatly the several forts in the country.

Hyder had become extremely powerful by now. Gōvinda Gōpāl Hari (a Mahrata General) who had conquered the bordering countries to the north of the province of Seringapatam, marched against the capital and demanded tribute to the extent of about a crore of rupees. Since there was not enough money in the treasury and it was not considered advisable to raise it unjustly from the people by putting pressure upon them, Kaiāchūrī Nāñjarājayya resigned his office of Sarvādhikārī, saying that it might be conferred on Hyder. All the powers of administration and the eighteen departments were now made over to Hyder who was asked to raise the required amount to pay the tribute.² Hyder unscrupulously teased the people in many ways, collected forty lakhs of rupees and pacified and sent Gōpāl Hari back by paying him this sum.

Hyder thus took charge of the entire province and paid also the salary due to the army. Since at this time Khande Rao carried tales against him to the King, he took him under his custody.³ In the meanwhile misunderstandings arose between Kaiāchūrī Nāñjarājayya and Krishnarāja Odeyar II. Hyder intervened and set apart a portion of the province to meet the expenditure of the royal family and retinue.⁴ But the entire province, revenue and army were kept under his management and enough money was reserved in the treasury to meet the salary of his army and the demands of the Mughals and the Mahratas.

Thus making himself supreme, Hyder set out on his military expedition⁵ with the object of extending the province. He conquered and annexed Chikkaballāpur, Doddaballāpur, Sira, Coorg, Maleyāla, Bīdarūr (Bīdanūr) and other places.

On the first lunar day of the dark half of Vaisākha in the year Vyaya, Śaka 1687, Chikka Krishnarāja Odeyar died⁶ having ruled for 31 years, 10 months and 26 days. On the third day of the bright half of Jyēshtha in the same year⁷ his son

On his return to Seringapatam Hyder went to Mysore and represented that inasmuch as he wanted to celebrate personally the marriage of Dalvoy Virarājayya, the Rāja should be pleased to return to Seringapatam. He promised that a territory yielding a revenue of three lakhs as also the Mysore gateway and the eastern gateway at Seringapatam would be placed at his disposal. To this effect he executed a written agreement and swore upon the Koran. He also prevailed upon his preceptors Akal Saib, Kāki Saib and Mir Farzulla Khan to swear in his behalf. The King was thus brought to Seringapatam; but all at once Hyder unscrupulously proved faithless. He placed guards¹ upon the King and himself occupied the house of Dalvoy Dēvarājayya and began ruling independently.

On the 5th lunar day of the bright half of Śrāvana in the year Khara, Śaka 1692, Nañjaiāja Odeyar passed away having ruled for five years and 18 days². On the 2nd day of the bright half of Bhādrapada in the same year³ Nawab Hyder Ali placed on the throne Chāmaiāja Odeyar, son of Krishnarāja Odeyar II, at Seringapatam.

Hyder then set out on his further conquests. He conquered Gutti, Chitrakal, Kadapa, Pālghācheṇi and other provinces and returned to the capital. On the 10th day of the bright half of Bhādrapada in the year Manmatha, Śaka 1696, Chāmarāja Odeyar died,⁴ having ruled for four years.

Hyder now raised to the throne Chāmarāja Odeyar, son of Kāragalli Dēve Arasu, on the 12th lunar day of the dark half of Bhādrapada in the same year⁵. In the year Vikārī⁶ he annexed Chitaldrug. In Śārvarī⁷ he proceeded against Trichinopoly and on Tuesday, the 2nd lunar day of the bright half of

PART VI—EXCAVATION.

The work conducted at Brahmagiri near Siddapur in the Molakālmuru taluk, Chitaldrug district, in the year 1940 could not be continued

Resumption of work during 1941 for various reasons, though the work of arranging, verifying and studying the antiquities was carried on at the headquarters. During May 1942, however, excavation was resumed at the site, but it was concentrated on just one pit with the main idea of verifying the previous results. Before stating the chief results of this excavation, it is proposed to give here a short account of the results of the work conducted in 1940 so that the results of the work of the two seasons might together be considered. And it is also proposed to state, at the end, some of the conclusions arrived at provisionally in the hope that they will be verified, checked, corroborated and improved upon by future excavation in the Dakhan.

On pages 63-72 of the Annual Report of this department for 1940, a note has been published embodying the results of an overground survey of the site. It has been mentioned there how the existence of the three copies of Aśoka's Minor Rock Edict

The layers.

No. 1 led to the location of the ancient town of Isila close by, on the right bank of the Chinna Hagari river. An account has been given of the topography of the neighbourhood, the limits of the old town, the brick and other structural evidences of the inhabited areas, the nature and variety of surface finds consisting of innumerable objects of stone, metal and pottery, and the occurrence of the many prehistoric cromlechs or burial chambers made of massive stone slabs. It has also been stated how a surface study suggested the existence of the following five stratified layers —

1. Chālukya-Hoysala layer
2. A Mauryan town with perhaps a pre-Mauryan commencement
3. A pre-Mauryan town of the Iron age using polished blackware pottery or ornamented chocolate-coloured ware connected with the late Neolithic period and the early Iron age
4. A Neolithic settlement
5. A pigmy flint culture

A rough sketch plan prepared of the site showed that the old town stretched in the shape of a crescent surrounding the northern nose of the hill where the edict stood. A good part of the site was found covered by the rice fields in the lower plains, while the mounds near the hill slopes had mostly been converted into dry fields for cultivation. Inasmuch as these mounds seemed to contain antiquities belonging to different stages of culture extending from the Mauryan times backwards into the unknown-prehistoric stages, a careful stratigraphical study of trial pits and trenches was found necessary. Accordingly two trenches, one measuring $40' \times 6' \times 18'$ (depth) and the other, $25' \times 6'$, were excavated across a mound that looked promising of results. Two more pits were sunk to the south-west of the Rock Inscription, of which one proved to be important for the study of pottery sequences. Other pits sunk here and there on the ancient site gave us more information regarding the Mauryan town (Pl. XIV, 1), while the excavation of about eight prehistoric cromlechs gave us knowledge of funerary pottery and modes of burial.

Historically it is known that the Maurya power was in occupation of the Dakhan

in the days of Bindusāra and Aśoka, the dates being approximately between 298 and 232 B.C. According to Aśoka's Rock Edict No. 13, in the country corresponding to modern Dakhan, three subordinate peoples, namely, the Ptenikas (Paithan), the Andhras (Nagārunikonda) and the Pulindas (Banavāsī) are mentioned as being within the borders, while the Satyaputas (Chitaldrug district?) are mentioned as being outside. Suvārnagiri is considered to have been the capital of the Dakhan province and several suggestions have been made for its identification. Dr. Fleet thought that it might be Kanakagiri in South Hyderabad, Mr. Yazdani thinks that it may be Maski in south-west Hyderabad and Dr. C. R. Narayana Rao suggests that it may be Sonnagiri close to the Yerragudi group of Aśoka's rock edicts. There is no doubt that the district town of Isila was close to the Brahmagiri hill and that it was within Aśoka's empire. As evidence of Asoka's times at Isila, we have found the three copies of his Minor Rock Edict No. 1, the excavated basement of a brick-built apse-backed chaitya or Buddhist temple half way up the hill behind the monks' caves, the occurrence of polished fine quality pottery, often bicoloured, such as is found in the Maurya sites elsewhere in India. The series of large natural caves near Aśoka's rock edict (Pl. XIV, 2) might have been the dwelling place of hermits or Rishis at first and later of Buddhist monks. This perhaps gave the town the name Isila or 'the place of the Rishis'. But the excavations revealed, at least in one of the pits, as many as nine different floors showing that the town must have flourished for several centuries. It is possible that the period of Maurya supremacy was only the last or, more probably, the penultimate period in the history of the town which may have decayed and disappeared somewhere about 200 B.C. when the supremacy of the Dakhan passed from the Maurya into the Śātavāhana hands. It is probable that Isila was a frontier town which decayed in prosperity just when Chandivalli and other places grew in wealth and splendour. But if Isila decayed in the early Śātavāhana days having had a more prosperous period during Maurya rule and pre-Maurya days, her life at least began many centuries before. Assuming, just for approximate calculation, that ordinary houses are rebuilt once in about fifty years, nine floors would account for more than four centuries of life. Thus it is possible to guess that the lowermost levels reached near 'Gāregundu' take us back to almost the 8th century B C, if not earlier. We have not yet been able to collect enough specimens to trace the growth of culture during the many centuries of the existence of the town of Isila, but we have been able to get an idea of the kind of potsherds yielded by the various levels.

Among the nine floors observed in the excavation of the house sites near 'Gāregundu,' the following varieties of pottery were noticed as we excavated downwards from the top. The bottom has not yet been reached.

Isila culture.

1. Largeish gourd shaped pots with rough exteriors, relief and incuse ornamentations on unpolished redware pottery. Evidently, they belong to the last days of the town. Along with these occurred painted redware probably belonging to about the early Śātavāhana times.
2. Polished fine pottery, yellowish brown outside and black inside strongly resembling Maurya pottery of Bhita and elsewhere.
3. Redware pottery, some specimens of which, particularly the drinking cups, were painted in white with lattice, geometrical and plant patterns, or had incised tooth and leaf ornamentations.
4. Tanware pottery with the designs painted in dark red.
5. Brownware pottery with the designs in dark violet.
6. Polished blackware with the designs in white, also bicoloured pottery plain or coloured inside.
7. Well burnished pure blackware occurring along with unpolished brownware. This layer particularly was pretty thick.
8. Polished pottery, with multicoloured mottled ornamentation, distinguishable among the colours being red, yellow, blue and black. Coarseware also; comparatively less of polished blackware.

Further excavation was stopped at this stage owing to the want of room and the approaching end of the season. It may be presumed that such a variety of pottery and such a development of tints and colours could have occurred only in a period of time spread over many centuries. It was evident that the Dakhan was passing through civilized life using iron implements and high class pottery some centuries before the Mauryas came into contact with it. We knew that we had come across a settlement belonging to a comparatively long existing Iron Age of the Dakhan. The details of this type of culture are being studied. Provisionally it has been called 'Isila Culture' for purposes of identification.

Two particular types of pottery, however, deserve special mention as they suggest foreign influence. One of these is painted with a red slip and ornamented in dark violet with plant and wave designs and is outwardly remarkably similar to some Foreign influences.

Indus valley pottery, though unlike it in having a black core inside the walls. The other has chequered and other patterns in black over a buff background as in so much of the third millennium B.C. pottery of Sindh, Sumer and Crete. Its inner face bears the impress of cotton cloth. These two are unlike the usual painted ware found at Chandravalli and other places in the Dakhan and suggest foreign influence though they may perhaps have been locally produced. Since the Indus Civilization used gold, jade and other materials which were probably imported from the Dakhan, we are justified in looking out for possible connections between Sindh and Mysore in prehistoric times. The potsherds in question are accordingly being subjected to the study of experts.

More surprising and more definite information was secured from the two trenches which, as has been mentioned, were excavated into the mounds on the hill side to the south-east of the town. When the first trench was dug, the workmen were inexperienced and sometimes mixed up lumps of earth belonging to the upper layers with those of the lower ones. But when the second trench was excavated, great care was taken to see that no such intermixture occurred. In this trench (Pl. XV, 1) particularly it looked as if we had obtained a correct index of the contents of the mounds. The finds of this trench were somewhat as follows, proceeding from the top downwards.

- 1 Top layer—Mixed specimens consisting of blue glass bangle pieces, jade bead, painted potsherds with designs and a fragmentary quartz crystal implement. This level was useless for stratigraphical study, since it was on a slope leading from the hillside and contained a heterogeneous variety of antiquities brought down by the rains and perhaps turned up by the ploughshare.
2. Stone foundations, painted potsherds, stone bead, bone bangle pieces, earthen crucible, iron pieces, iron slag, glass slag.
- 3 Shell beads, stone beads, terra-cotta objects, red and black polished ware painted with the designs, red, black and tan-coloured and chocolate coloured ware.
- 4 Depth 2 feet—Tan and black, and red and black potsherds, tanware, iron slag, a neolithic celt piece.
- 5 Depth 3 feet—Stag's horn, burnt stones, perhaps belonging to a fire place, red and black painted ware, some with designs.
6. Depth 4 feet—A floor. Red, black and tan painted ware. Coarse piece of grooved roofing tile, painted polished ware—red, black and tan-coloured; coarse grayware.
7. Depth 5 feet—Agate bead, quartz pieces, neolith, painted red potsherd.
8. Depth 5½ feet—Shell bead, quartz flakes.
- 9 Depth 6 feet—Neoliths, microliths.

- 10 Depth $6\frac{1}{2}$ feet—Painted potsherds, neolith, buttonlike stone piece, microlithic borer.
- 11 Depth $6\frac{3}{4}$ feet—Some human teeth, microliths.
- 12 Depth 7 feet—Charcoal pieces, quartz pieces, small neolithic celt.
- 13 Depth $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet—Ashy layer, gray unpolished pottery, microlithic scraper.
- 14 Depth 8 feet—Microliths, quartz pieces, round whetstone, grayware pottery.
- 15 Depth $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet—Microliths with a small neolith and chipped quartz pieces.
- 16 Depth $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet—Microliths, stone pounder, grayware pottery, coarse grained and full of mica.
17. Depth $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet—Quartz pieces, microliths, chipped stone implement coarse pottery, a fire place of rough stones
- 18 Depth $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 10'—At one end of the pit coarse wide-mouthed burial urns with skeletal remains of young children including the bones of the limbs and parts of skullcaps. In one of the urns was found a drinking cup of pottery with a black slip and slightly polished.

During May 1942 a pit was systematically excavated from surface to virgin soil, making a careful stratigraphical study of the finds with the help of photographs and drawings. Over 3,000 antiquities, discovered are now being studied in Mysore. Several strata of a long lived town occurred during the course of dugging (Pl. XV, 2). The surface finds were generally mixed up in character, that is, earlier antiquities had been mixed up with later ones. The latest in date among them was a copper coin of the Bijapur dynasty. The layer below the find spot of this coin, corresponding to about 9" below the surface level, yielded a gold Chālukya coin of the Bhujabala and Lion type. Next to the Chālukyan layer, we came upon another layer which yielded varied ceramic ware, as in previous years, and stone foundations of buildings. It appeared possible that the Śātavāhanas were in possession of the place during the early centuries of the Christian era as evidenced by the find of a stray lead coin of the elephant type. During the course of excavations, however, no Śātavāhana coins, corresponding to the types found at Chandravalli, were discovered. But at a depth of about 2½ ft below the surface level, a medium-sized lead coin was found. It is provisionally surmised that it is an early Śātavāhana coin assignable to about 200 B.C. At the level in which this coin was found, occurred gourd-shaped hand-made pots and painted potsherds. Among the painted potsherds there were a few pieces which were thin and very highly polished.

Main results

Several layers were noted below the level at which the lead coin mentioned above was discovered. Varied pottery including redware, red and brown ornamented ware, polished blackware, chocolate-coloured ware, and coloured ware suggesting more than two colours were found. With these were associated pieces of iron objects up to a depth of about 8 ft. below the surface. Further down no metallic object or fragment was found, though polished pottery continued to be discovered. One or two specimens suggested foreign influence and were painted with a red slip and ornamented in dark violet with wave designs, being outwardly somewhat similar to some Indus valley pottery.

Below the iron age layer occurred the neolithic layer. In one or two places, on level with the find spots of the neoliths, were also found microliths mixed up with highly burnished black pottery and mica-laden greyish pottery. Further down we came upon the microlithic layer itself which was found to be very thick at Brahmagiri, being more than five feet in thickness. Throughout this layer occurred the black burnished ware mentioned above as also the mica-laden pottery. Hundreds of microliths were thus collected. Among them there are paring knives, saws, scrapers, boreis, arrow-heads, etc. They are made of chert, chalcedony, flint or quartz and are, one and all, very hard and sharp.

In the excavations just described it was evident that the upper town layers were comparatively thin, while the lower layers of the period were much thicker. The layer corresponding to the iron age was clearly identifiable, its pottery being characterized by its varied painting and polishing. In the later stages of what may be called the full iron age, the colour most popular is red and next to it tan or chocolate. Potsherds painted with geometrical and other designs also occur in these levels. Then we descend to the early iron age when neoliths are yet being used. Here tanware is more common than redware and polished blackware and chocolate-coloured ware also occurs. The next lower level is the full neolithic yielding largish well-ground neolithic celts and having no trace of iron. Along with coarse pottery this level yields finely polished blackware. It may be surmised that blackware began to be used in the neolithic period and continued to be used in the iron age. The continuous use of polished blackware commencing in the neolithic period and found again in the iron age proves the continuity of the iron age with the neolithic age. In the first trial trench whose evidence has not been used for this note, copper slag pieces and a copper fish hook were recovered from the upper part of the neolithic level. In spite of the opinion of Bruce Foote to the contrary, one will be led to form the hypothesis that copper and iron were both in use in small quantities from almost the middle of the neolithic period (c 4000 ? B C), and that iron very soon superseded copper and became more popular. In the caves around Chandravalli, the occurrence of neolithic implements has been noticed along with evidence of very primitive iron smelting. This lends support to the view that neolithic man in the Dakhan commenced his use of iron when yet he was using his polished trap celts and pounders—perhaps along with small quantities of copper.

In the neolithic age it is possible to distinguish between the full neolithic with its large celts, pounders, mealing stones, adzes, etc., and the early neolithic, in which the celts are often chipped all over the body and ground only at the edge. Others are between two and three inches long and are made of sand stone and other materials of a texture much softer than trap. These small celts are generally flat-sided and thinner and have often flattish though narrow tops. They look almost like toys. The fact that in association with them occur quartz flakes and pigmy stone implements, leads to the conclusion that there was the beginning of neolithic industry during a microlithic stage of culture. This was one of the most unexpected surprises of the excavation, for it was now definite that instead of microliths being stray occurrences met with near the surface, a large and long lived level had been struck, which yielded plenty of microliths and evidence also of a local microlithic industry, such as rejected quartz flakes, chipped cores, etc. The occurrence of bone beads and of coarse grayware pottery containing clay mixed with mica, which easily degenerates under the long continued action of moisture, was something new in the prehistory of the Dakhan. Microliths had no doubt been collected in various parts of India, but a regular microlithic settlement and one definitely underlying and leading on to the neolithic strata was a find worthy of further study.

The discovery of the microlithic settlement suggested that at Brahmagiri at last we had found something connecting with the late mesolithic period. But of the various mesolithic cultures, this microlithic culture, which, for identification, has here been provisionally called 'Roppa Culture' after the nearest village, appears to correspond much less with the late paleolithic Azilian stage of Europe or with the Gafsiian stage of north-west Africa. The definite presence of coarse pottery and of a finely shaped shoulderless tanged crystal arrow-head, the burial of children's bones under the kitchen floors in wide mouthed coarse grayware urns, the occasional presence of spouts and darkware slip-painted pottery, of buffalo and horse (?) bones and stone pounders, hunted at first at greater affinity with the later microlithic cultures resembling the Campignian of France. A closer study revealed that the split-edged pick, the painted pebble, the incised ornamentation on pottery and other characteristics of the Campignian culture appeared to be absent. So we concluded that we were face to face with an early neolithic-microlithic culture which was different from anything till now known to prehistory, but was parallel to the Campignian. European archaeologists have generally assigned the Campignian culture and other related microlithic cultures to about 8000 or 6000 B.C. It was extraordinarily interesting to think that a level had been discovered containing evidence of a human settlement in the Dakhan in the late microlithic period.

The most important objects met with during the course of the overground survey were the groups of cromlechs, dolmens and cistvaens (Pl. XVI, 1). Externally, these resembled in general appearance the groups found in many other parts of the Dakhan plateau and especially in Mysore. Some cromlechs showed, instead of the single circle of rough boulders, double circles of stones the intervening space being filled in with rubble. Only a few table stones were visible above ground, and in the case of a number of cistvaens without the table stones and the circles of stones, the tops of the stone boxes with their side slabs projecting anti-clockwise in the swastika fashion could also be seen (Pl XV, 3). Occasionally a funerary urn buried in the earth was also just visible in the ground. It was clear that this group of prehistoric objects belonged to a great necropolis which must have been in existence and use for several hundreds of years. The people of the adjacent villages called these structures 'Maurya dwellings,' and it was significant that the name Maurya was in use in such close proximity to a genuine Maurya town. It was surmised that while the people of the Maurya times may also have been buried in the locality, the great bulk of the cromlechs which clearly exhibited what looked like a development of several centuries belonged to the prehistoric period of Isila town. A number of these cromlechs were selected and excavated. Where necessary, the dolmens were blasted, the circles of stones were removed and the cistvaens constructed with large flat slabs and were made available for study. It was found that the cists had their slabs projecting in one direction anti-clockwise as in a swastika and that usually on the east or south-east, the wall slab had a hole about 15 to 18 inches in diameter and that this was covered over on the outside with a shutter slab. The contents of the cistvaens were examined in stages of 2 or 3 inches depth. It was found that below the top layer of earth there were thick layers of lime-stone intended perhaps to prevent the buried corpses from being attacked by vermins and also to help their faster decomposition. Below the limestone layer often commenced to appear varied kinds of pottery placed around the walls on the inside with the skeletons themselves lying in the middle (Pl XV, 4). Some of the cists had been divided into two or more chambers by cross slabs and each chamber contained a separate burial. The bottom slab was reached generally at a depth of 4 to 6 feet.

That the cromlechs and cistvaens were burial chambers was clearly established by the occurrence of human skeletons in nearly every one of them. Only one fractional burial was noticed. It appeared to be that of a boy whose disconnected skull was found placed erect on his chest. A few cases were of multiple burials, a number of corpses being packed into single chambers. One of these contained as many as four full grown men's skeletons with some bits of iron weapons. They might have been soldiers killed in a skirmish and buried together. In one cist a husband lay on his back with his leg bones folded in padmasana as in modern South Indian burials, and his wife lay to his left on her right side with her arms embracing him. This looked like a case of 'sati'. A sword blade was recovered close to the man's skeleton. In another cist the skeleton lay slightly turned to the right with a battle axe by its side and a large number of pots around it. In still another cist, one hand of the corpse was placed on the mouth of a pot. In nearly all the cases, the head of the corpse was to the north or north-west and the feet towards the south or south-east facing the hole in the wall slab.

An attempt was made to recover some of the skeletons but many of the thinner bones and especially the skull bones which had become

The funerary pottery soaked in moisture percolating from the canals and rice-fields had become exceedingly brittle and went to powder

even with the lightest touch. Since no arrangement had been made for recovering these skeletons by the shellacing process, photographs of the skeletons were taken as far as possible in situ and they were once again covered over with earth. The weapons found with the corpses and most of the pottery were, however, collected, often along with the decayed contents. The pottery generally consisted of coloured ware painted red and polished or more often richly polished blackware. In two burials a number of pots, each with three short legs, were collected though these pots were much smaller than the footed pots found in some other prehistoric sites near Bangalore and Kōlār, and exhibited in the Government Museum, Bangalore. In one case only a largish redware pot was found with the lattice design painted on it in white. It was clear that a fuller study of the necropolis could yield much more information about the people living in prehistoric Isīla in the iron age. No coins or neoliths were found in any of the burials. It was also surmised that a sequence study of prehistoric burials might prove profitable since it looked as if there was almost an evolution in the burials in their shape, size and mode and also in their pottery. It was also clear that wherever a field of cromlechs was found, as in so many places in the Dakhan, a prehistoric dwelling site ought also be found in its proximity.

The provisional conclusions drawn from the study of the prehistory of the Dakhan, as mentioned in the previous paragraphs, may now be stated briefly. The dates mentioned are widely approximate and purely provisional and suggestive.

Conclusions

1. There is evidence to confirm Bruce Foote's conclusion that the Dakhan passed through some stages of lower paleolithic culture parallel to the Chellean, Acheulean and Mousterian epochs of Europe 50,000 to 30,000 years ago and possibly through a stage corresponding to the Magdalenian (c. 13000 B.C.). No stratigraphical study of these cultures has yet been possible.

2. Some time later a microlithic culture spread over the Dakhan using pigmy stone implements along with coarse greyware pottery and shell and bone beads.

This industry is different from the other known mesolithic industries of the world and appears to be parallel to the Campignian and other later mesolithic or early neolithic types of 8000 to 6000 B.C in Europe.

3 In the microlithic period, the art of polishing implements spread over the Dakhan until at last harder stones were polished and shaped into celts, pounders, etc , and the full neolithic period began and flourished (6000 to 4000 B.C ?). The characteristic pottery of this time was polished blackware which is found along with coarser types

4. Some time in the neolithic epoch copper and iron appear to have come into use and the copper age possibly flourished for a comparatively short period (about 3000 B.C ?) During this time, small quantities of iron appear to have been in use.

5. In the late neolithic period the method of producing larger quantities of iron was discovered and its use spread over the Dakhan (About 2500 or 2000 B.C).

6. Very soon the Dakhan entered upon an iron age in the earlier part of which stone implements were in use along with iron (About 2000 B.C) Later on, in the full iron age a prehistoric culture of high quality developed (About 1500 to 500 B.C) Polished blackware pottery was popular during a considerable part of the period, then came coloured ware in the shape of tanware and redware Commencing from the period of the blackware and extending to the earlier part of the redware period, the art of ornamenting drinking cups and other vessels with lattice wicker work and plant patterns in dark-red and white was in vogue The cromlechs and other megalithic structures appear to belong to the period extending from the early iron age right on to the Maurya times, and their evolution can now be suggested. (2000 to 200 B.C)

7. Coloured and polished pottery, often red or brown outside and black inside, continued to be used during the epoch which we can definitely assign to the Maurya times. The art of ornamenting with incised designs and relief mouldings commenced about this period and continued during the succeeding Śātavāhana epoch (200 B.C. to 200 A.D.)

8. Śātavāhana pottery is characterized by redware, somewhat polished and ornamented, often with varied relief and incise patterns. Wide-mouthed drinking cups and large round bottomed urns became exceedingly common during this period,

9. The existence of civilized town life is traceable from the iron age onward for a comparatively long period of time before we reach the beginnings of history

10. There now remain to be gathered the details of four stages of prehistoric culture in the Dakhan

(a) the lower paleolithic ,

(b) the microlithic ,

(c) the neolithic , and

(d) a highly civilized, well-established and widely spread iron age civilization which is connected with the Maurya and Śātavāhana epochs at its later end.

chaladēva having sent Sāli Brahma . . . died at Nalkarudu (?).
Poletālvā's house servant (?) Adipadadhe . . . Pōchana, son of Chingayya and Chāvabbe (set up) the stone

Note

This viragal inscription stone had been inserted into the ceiling of the Kailāśēśvara temple. When the temple was renovated, it was removed by the contractor and kept by the side of the temple. The right portion of the stone is broken and lost so that the record is incomplete. Yet it appears to be important since it refers to some historic battle.

The Śaka year, mentioned in the record, is now lost. Only the month, the tithi and the week day remain. It is however possible to find out the date approximately.

The inscription appears to record the death of a hero in a battle between the armies of Tailapa and Panchaladēva. Tailapa is evidently Tailapa II, the Western Chālukya emperor, who was ruling between 973 and 997 A.D. Panchaladēva was a subordinate of Mārasinga, the Ganga king. His inscriptions are found in the Dhārwār district, and are dated between the years 971 and 975 A.D. He was ruling Sebhi 30 under Mārasinga according to an inscription in the Kālamēśvara temple at Adagunchi, the date of which is about 971 A.D. (Ind. Ant. Vol. XII, p. 255). He is addressed as Komarāṅkabhīma in another inscription in the Banaśankari temple at the village Siggāve.

In some later inscriptions—Munaj copper plates (Ind. Ant. Vol. VIII, p. 10), Gadag inscriptions (Elliot's Ms. collection Vol. I, p. 370) and Kālige inscription of Hyderabad (ibid. p. 415) a stanza is found in which it is clearly stated that Taila II took the head of Panchala and began ruling the kingdom in the year Srimukha (corresponding to 973 A.D.).

The details of the date as mentioned in the present inscription are Vai, Panchami, Brihaspativāra. In the four years from 971 to 974 A.D., during which period Panchaladēva ruled, these details correspond to Thursday the 10th April 973 A.D. which might be taken as the date of the present inscription.

The Chālukyas, Rāshtrakūtas and the Gangas were fighting with one another during this period. Taila II came to the throne in A.D. 973 after conquering many hostile kings. He appears to have sent an army under Ballavati Brahma to conquer Gangavādi. Panchaladēva, being a subordinate of the Ganga king, might have sent Sāli Brahman against Taila's army in order to protect Gangavādi. In the battle that took place between these two armies, a hero in the army of Panchaladēva died and in his memory the vīragal was set up.

Regarding Ballavati Brahma and Sāli Brahman nothing is known. The hero who died in the battle seems to be Adipadadhe (?), the house-servant (manevagati) of Poletālva. Who this Poletālva was cannot be determined. He might have been an important officer in Panchaladēva's army. The word manevagati is used in the sense of house-servant in many inscriptions (see E. C. III, Int. 91; Nj 158).

Pōchana, son of Chingaya and Chāvabbe, set up this stone.

The place where the battle took place cannot be determined. Vīragals are generally set up either in the place of battle or in the native places of the heroes. If we take Malūr, where the present inscription is found, to be the place of battle, we can say that Taila's army had advanced as far as Malūr in the Gangavādinād. But Malūr may more probably have been the native place of the hero. For, at the place, there is another vīragal which seems to be of Poletālva's son. The latter is the following inscription.

Transliteration

1. svasti śrī Permmādiya sūle Biyyal
2. Poletālvaṇa maga Bhuvanāditya

Translation

Be it well Biyyal, the concubine of śrī Permmādi . Bhuvanāditya son of Poletālva . . .

Note

This is a second fragmentary vīragal which had been built into the ceiling of the Kailāśeśvara temple. It was also removed and kept by the side of the temple. The characters of the inscription and the name Poletālva found in it suggest that the record belongs to the same period as the previous inscription (No 2). Since a portion of it is broken and lost, it is incomplete.

The inscription mentions a concubine by name Biyyal of one śrī Permmādi. This Permmādi seems to be Mārasinga, the Ganga ruler, because Poletālva mentioned in this inscription is also mentioned in the previous one, along with Panchala-dēva who was a subordinate of Mārasinga. Poletālva might have been an officer under him. His son Bhuvanāditya appears to have been the hero who died in the battle. Biyyal might have caused the stone to be set up in his memory.

Bhuvanāditya might have also fought against Taila's army in the battle mentioned in the previous inscription (No 2). This war took place in about 973 A.D., most probably in the Ganga kingdom. During this period, Mārasinga was ruling in Talakād.

As the vīragals of Poletālva's house-servant and son are found at Malūr, it might have been their birth place.

Note

Numbers 4 to 23 are fragmentary Tamil inscriptions which are found in the Apramēya and Kailāsēsvara temples at Malūr and in the temples and tank at Kūdalūr. Of a number of fragmentary stones found there, only those which give some meaning and which contain some historical events, are published here Many of these inscriptions belong to the Chōla period

When the ancient Chōla temples were renovated from time to time, either the order of the stones was changed or several stones were removed and used elsewhere. Thus the stones bearing the inscriptions have been used upside down while building the walls of the mahādvāra of the temple and the steps of the tank at the place. This evidently is due to uneducated workers who knew nothing about the inscriptions So far as the Kailāsēsvara temple at Malūr is concerned, it may be stated that during its recent renovation, the inscription stones have been put in the order in which they were recorded during the first survey by Mr. B. L. Rice.

No. 5 is a fragmentary inscription probably belonging to the reign of the Chōla king Rājendra Chōla I (early part of the 11th century). It gives details of the boundaries of some land granted perhaps to the Apramēyasvāmi temple at Malūr. The extent of the land granted is stated to be 40 kulis.

This forms one of the fragments of an inscription which had been originally carved on the basement stones of the Apramēya temple. The slab on which this fragment is written must have been taken from that temple and used for the repairs of the basement of the Kailāśēśvara temple at the same place. The fragment seems to be the continuation of No 234 of the Bangalore Supplementary volume (Ep Car.)

The record contains a very small portion of the historical introduction to the reign of the Chōla king Rājendra Chōla I found usually in his inscriptions. It registers the grant of some land for purchasing oil to light two lamps every day before the god Apramēya in the Apramēya-vinnagar (at Malūr). The grant is said to have been made by the sabharyōr (members of the assembly) of Nārasimhachaturvēdi mangalam from out of the lands belonging to them.

No date is given. But the record belongs to the reign of the Chōla king Rājendrachola I

This fragmentary inscription seems to record the purchase of some land from some person for the service and food offerings in a Śiva temple (probably the Arkāśvara temple of Maṭūr) for the price of 60 gadyānas. It is stated in the record that as there was no yield of wet crops from the land for three years since Durmatī and no return was received for the money paid, the land was granted as Śivabrāhmaṇapakkaṇi (present of land for a Śiva Brāhmaṇa) and Archanāperukkakkāṇi (grant of land for services in a temple) on condition that the donee had to make an offering of one kuruni of rice every day for the god. This grant was made by the three sthānapatis of the temple with pouring of water. The śāsana embodying this grant was written on behalf of the sthānapatis by Kōmālyāndān Mayanāndān.

Note

This fragmentary inscription stone is placed on the well of the Gopālakrishna-svāmi temple at Honganūr. It appears to be the basement stone of some temple. It is about 3 feet long and a foot broad. There is another fragmentary stone to the south of the Āṇjanēya temple at the same place which also appears to be a basement stone. It is published as Channupatna 43 in E. C. IX. It would have been very useful if the other fragments were also found. From the characters of the present inscription and the titles found in it we can definitely say that the record belongs to the Chōlas. The date of this inscription might be the same as that of Cp. 43, i.e., about 1020 A. D.

The important temples at Malur, Kūdalūr and Malūrpatna were constructed by Chōla princes. During the Chōla period some Chōla Viceroy seems to have been ruling in these parts. He might have constructed both the Saiva and Vaishnava temples in these parts and made grants to them. At Honganūr also some Krishna temple seems to have been constructed at that time. The word Śrīkrishnadēva applies to the god and some grants are made to that god.

The present Gōpālakrishna temple at Honganūr is a later construction. Probably it was built at a later date on the spot where the old Krishna temple of the Chōla period stood. Some basement stones of some temple belonging to the Chōla period are found in the village. One of them bears the inscription (Cp. 43) which appears to be the beginning of a larger inscription and mentions the titles of a Chōla king. The present record appears to be the last portion of an inscription mentioning some grant.

At the beginning of the present inscription is found ra kēsari pa . . .. This seems to be "Kōparakēsaripānmarānā" which is a title applied to Rājēndra Chōla. Since a number of Rājēndra Chōla's inscriptions are found around the village, the present record also may belong to his reign.

The place mentioned in the record seems to be [Kī] lalē nāḍa Punga. Kīlalenāḍu is also referred to in the inscription Channupatna 86. This Kīlalenāḍu forms the present Channupatna taluk and its neighbourhood. 'Punga . . .' might be Punganūr, the present Honganūr.

Two khandugas of land, etc., are stated to have been granted to the god Kṛishna-dēva. The meaning of the lines here is not clear. Probably some money obtained from some tax (? polu) might have also been granted to the god.

It is thus possible for us to conclude that the Chōlas originally constructed the Krishnadēva temple and made grants to it. This record further shows that though he Chōlas were ardent Śaivaites, they were also tolerant of Vaiṣṇavism.

Note

This record is engraved on the pedestal of the Śāntinātha image. The characters seem to belong to about the 13th century A.D. . with the order of protection that it is free of all taxes like smoke-tax, loom-tax, goat tax, tax on food, khāna, kaluku, beddale, (etc) at all times and also that the officers of Chikkagangavādinād should not enter those villages, Nārasimhadēvarasa gave the stone śāsana showing favour to the mahājanas. According to this order all those villages are free of all taxes at all times like sobhana (?) hay stack monthly honours, nibandhi, etc. Thus Nārasimhadēvarasa, having favoured the mahājanas of Chikka Sōmanāthapura, made the gift with pouring of water. For this gift Nārasimhadēvarasa's signature—Malaparaluganda śrī

The usual imprecatory verses at the end. Good fortune.

Note

The record is fragmentary since the left portion of the slab is broken and lost.

Narasimhadēvarasa, the Hoysala king granted some village to the mahājanas of Chikka Sōmanāthapura free of taxes, like the smoke-tax, loom-tax, goat-tax, khāna, etc. While making the gift he also ordered that the officers of Chikkagangavādinād should not enter those villages (to collect taxes)

A number of taxes are named here. But what kind of taxes are khāna, kaluku and sobhana, cannot be determined.

In the end there is the signature of Nārasimhadēvarasa as Malaparalu-ganda. This signature is used by Ballāla II, Sōmēśvara and Nārasimha III, the Hoysala rulers and it has been mostly used by Nārasimha III. Since parts of the Channapattana taluk where the present inscription is found, came under the Hoysala rule during the reign of Sōmēśvara and Nārasimha III, the Nārasimhadēvarasa mentioned in the present epigraph must be Nārasimha III. The characters also belong to about the 13th century so that the date might be taken as about 1270 A.D.

another inscription at the same place. The record is on a vīraḡaḡa, which contains the figure of a hero with his head severed and held in his hand. Probably it is an instance of self-sacrifice. Such sacrifices in front of the Śiva temples appear to have been common during the Hoysala period. The name of the hero is not mentioned.

The characters appear to belong to the 13th century A. D.

Note

In the Śaka year 1477 Vikrama sam Māgha śu 10 Nagarūra Basavarasa, son of Nāgarasa of Kampasāgara, presented the above-mentioned Nandikamba to the god Basavarāja.

Śaka 1477 is Rākshasa and not Vikrama as mentioned in the record. The lunar year Vikrama was in Ś 1442. If the Śaka year is reckoned, the date would correspond to Tuesday, 21st January 1556 A. D. If the cyclic year is reckoned the date would be Friday, 18th January 1521 A. D. Probably the former is the date mentioned in the inscription.

There is no village of the name of Kampasāgara in the Chennapatna taluk. Many a time the Vijayanagara rulers re-named the villages after their own names when they granted them. But the original names remained and the new names disappeared. 'Kampasāgara' may have similarly been a new name that disappeared soon after.

Nāgarasa's son Basavarasa was perhaps a private person who granted the Nandikamba to the Upparige Basavēśvara temple.

Be it well Baireyanāyaka, son of the illustrious mahāsāmantadhipati Somniyanāyaka caused the Garudakambha to be made for the god Śrī Chemmnakēsavanātha of Śrī Jāla

Note

This inscription records the setting up of the garulagamba by Baireyanāyaka son of the illustrious mahāsāmantadhipati Sonniyanāyaka, in front of the Channakēsavanātha temple at Jāla. The date of the record is given as Virōdhi sam. Kārttika śu 10, Thursday. No Śaka year is given. The characters seem to belong to the beginning of the 15th century. Sonniyanāyaka of this inscription might be the same as the one referred to in E. C. IX, Ht. 31 and 63. He was a general under the Vijayanagar king Harihara II. The date of Ht. 63 is 1412 A.D. The cyclic year Virōdhi nearest to 1412 A.D. was in 1409 A.D. and the date of the record would correspond to 18th October 1409, a Friday but not Thursday as mentioned in the epigraph. Sonniyanāyaka appears to have had two sons: one of them was Hiriyapa (E. C. IX, Ht. 31) and the other Baireyanāyaka mentioned in the present record.

1 Śrī Nāgamāra

Note

Two metallic tripods were found at Vāgata while digging in a field called Būdhalla. Both of them are now in the Mysore Archaeological museum. One of them bears the present inscription. A similar inscribed tripod in the Chennakēśava temple at Bēlūr, granted by Kumāra Lakshmidhara dandanāyaka, a general under the Hoysala king Ballāla II, for the god Chennakēśva, has been noticed in the Annual Report for the year 1940. The present tripod with its inscription happens to be noteworthy since it is the oldest of such tripods so far known.

Unlike the tripod at Bēlūr which is finely ornamented, the present tripod is very plain. On the flat surface of its circular band is the inscription-Śrī Nāgamāra. The characters of the inscription seem to belong to the Ganga period. The letter ra is written lengthwise and the loop has joined the cross line. The left tail of ga is curved up inwards. The characters may, on paleographical grounds, be assigned to the end of the 8th or the early part of the 9th century.

The record merely contains the name- Śrī Nāgamāra. Whether he was a king or an ascetic cannot be determined. The attribute 'Śrī' denotes that he must have been an important person. Such tripods are mostly used in temples to keep the vessels used for the god's worship and the practice seems to be very old. The present tripod may have been probably presented by Nāgamāra to some temple or if he were an ascetic, it might have been presented to him by others for use during worship. The fact, however, that the metallic tripod is more than a thousand years old is very interesting.

Translation

Be it well Victorious is the adorable Padmanābha resembling the cloudless sky.

A sun in illumining the clear firmament of the illustrious Ganga family, possessed of a kingdom inhabited by righteous people and conquered by the force of his victorious arms, adorned with the wounds received during battles in which hosts of cruel enemies were cut down and belonging to the Kanvayanasagōtra the illustrious Kongani-dhaimma-mahārāja —

His son —Inheritor of the good qualities of his father, conducting himself agreeably to his culture and modesty, obtained of sovereignty only for the sake of the good government of his subjects, obtained of the great intelligence improved by acquaintance with the best principles of the essence of various sciences, a touchstone for testing the gold the learned and poets, specially skilled among those who expound and practise the science of polity in all its branches, possessed of well-distributed faithful servants, author of a commentary on Dattaka's aphorisms the illustrious Mādhava-mahādhnāja —

His son —Endowed with the good qualities of his father and grandfather, possessed of a fame tasted by the waters of the four oceans, and acquired in many battles with elephants, possessed of lustie acquired from riding rutting elephants and horses, distinguished for the wealth gained by the use of the bow the illustrious Harivaimma-mahādhirāja —

His son —With his head purified by the pollen from the lotuses the feet of Tryambaka, possessed of arms grown stout and hard with athletic exercises, purchaser of the kingdom with the price of his strength, of arm and valour, with his sharp-edged sword dear to the demons whose lips were shrivelled with hunger, ever ready to

His son.—The beloved sister's son of Krishnavarmma-mahādhnāja,—who was the Sun in the firmament of the Kadamba-kula, anointed with the final ablutions of the uninterrupted horse sacrifices, obtainer of the sovereignty while on the couch of the lap of his divine mother, enjoying to the full the essence of the three objects of desire without one interfering with the other, fearless though surrounded with all the bands of tributary chiefs whom he had subjected, having parties of councillors attached to him by continual affection and gifts, with his mind illumined with the increase of learning and modesty, having adopted the character of the kings of the Kṛita-yuga, with his wide-spread fame gained by victory in many wars covering the three worlds like the unbroken expanse of a milky ocean, bold to give without stint, with his inviolable commands placed upon the heads of hostile kings subdued by his invincible might, surpassing Kubēra in the growth of his wealth increased in many ways, a mine of many glorious qualities, reckoned the first among the learned, the joy of the hearts of his beloved ones, resembling the ocean adorned with gems in not transgressing the bounds of respect like Yama in punishing according to desert, like the Sun in the greatness of his glory, like Vāivasvata Manu devoted to protecting the south in the maintenance of castes and religious orders, the friend of all, of high birth, the illustrious Konkani-mahārāja.

His son —Defeater of the moon with his extra-ordinary lustre, with his fame spreading to all the points of the compass, with his great mind following the path of morality, with his fore-arm scarred to hardness by the striking of the bow-string, with his pair of lotus-like feet illumined by the rays of the gems on the heads of foreign kings bent in reverence, with royal lustre obtained by his victories in many great battles like that of Andani, with the group of his relations joyful at the show of his ever-present affection, with the dark spot of Kali removed by the celebration of his perpetual generosity, with his inner soul purified by its moving around the lotus feet of Kātyāyanī with his chest resembling (hard as) the thunderbolt enlarged by exercise, the drinking ground of the humming bees, the great poets, the banner of the dynasty of the glorious Gāṅgeyas, the cause of the discontinuance of smearing vermilion on the breasts and collyrium to the eyes of the women of enemy-kings, Śrī Mādhavavarma whose other name was Durvinita Prithivi Konkani Mahārāja

By him, during his increasing victory and prosperity, in the fourth year, in the month of Madhu (Chaitra), in the bright half, on the thirteenth day, for the increase of his fame and prosperity has been granted with pouring of water according to the procedure of gifts to Brāhmanas, with all exemptions, the village named Pennaūr in the district of Korikunda to Agnisarma's son Kāpālī Sarma, of the Kutsa-gōtra and the Tattirya-chaitana, the boon-tree of discourse the inhabitant of Upakotta and of remarkable action in Soma sacrifices

Whoever appropriates (this gift) becomes liable to the five sins. Further, Manu has sung these verses —Whoever appropriates land, gifted by himself or another, will live in terrible darkness for sixty thousand years. No gift, present or future, is greater than the gift of land. By appropriating it accrues the sin such as does not exist in the present or in the future. This earth has been enjoyed by many kings like Sagara. Whosoever possessed the land at one time, his then was the fruit thereof. It is very easy to give away what is one's own, but it is difficult to protect another's property. Between giving and protecting, protecting is more meritorious than giving.

This copper record has been written by one called Chōmattattāia, owner of the land yielding three khandugas, a house, some waste land and a cattle-pen.

Note

DESCRIPTION

The grant consists of six plates, each measuring 7" by 2", with a ring 3" in diameter and bears the seal of an elephant. The plates are written on both the sides, except the first which is written on one side only. The ring had not been cut at the time the plates were received. Five lines of writing are found on each side of each plate while on the reverse of the last plate are found only four lines. Each line contains about 28 letters.

FIND SPOT

These plates were found in the possession of Gōkari Channappa of Bisanahalli in the hobli of Jadigēnahalli, Hoskote taluk. He states that these plates were found in his lands while ploughing some years ago. The plates have been purchased from him this year by the Archaeological Department.

PALEOGRAPHY

The grant is engraved in the Early Kannada characters. The letters are generally well-formed. Each letter is from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ an inch in height and is deeply cut. The style of the characters in this inscription is different from that of the characters in Durvinita's other inscriptions. In the Gummaredipura and Uttanūr plates (M. A. R. 1912, Pl. II, and 1916, Pl. XII) the letters are very well cut and the serifs are clearly formed. In the present inscription the serif is not clear. The characters resemble to some extent those of the Maddaguri inscription No. 110 (E. C. XII, Tumkur) and appear to belong to the early part of the 7th century A.D. The test letters ba, ja, ka, la, ncha, etc., found in the plates all belong to about this period. The mistakes in orthography are very few (II A, l. 9, Srīmatmādhava, III B, ll. 23 and 24 Kārttayugaṇi Charivatāvalambina, etc.)

LANGUAGE

The language is mostly Sanskrit except for the last two lines which are in Kannada and mostly prose except for the imprecatory verses in ll. 47-53 which are in the Anushtub metre. The language is generally free from faults. IV B, l 31 has Kshanān-dakshināndīśi instead of kshanātdakshināndīśi. Similarly instead of suprajasa in the same line there is suprajasa. Probably these are the engraver's mistakes.

THE SCRIBE

The grant is stated to have been written by Chōmattattāia. In Tamil the words tachchān and tattān mean a carpenter or a goldsmith. In Sanskrit Tcashakāra means a goldsmith. It is thus possible to take Chōmattattāra as meaning a goldsmith by name Chōma or Sōma. A plot of land of the sowing capacity of three khandugas, a house, (some) waste land (? pālu) and a pen (? pattu) are mentioned in the last two lines. These may have been granted to the scribe Chōma for his having engraved the inscription on the plates.

PURPOSE OF THE GRANT

The record registers the grant of the village Pennaūr in the Korikunda Vishaya, free of all imposts, by the Ganga king Durvinīta in his fourth regnal year, for the increase of his merit. The donee is Kāpālīśarma, son of Agnīśarma of Kutsa gōtra and Tatturiya sākhā, well versed in interpreting the Vēdas and versed in all the rites like the Sōmēṣṭi.

GEOGRAPHY

Korikunda is perhaps different from Kodikonda which is to the east of Hindupur. Korikunda vishaya may perhaps be also identified with parts of the Mālur and Hoskote taluks, since it is referred to in E. C. X Mr 72 and in the Annual Report for the year 1938 inscription No 1. In Mr 72 two Jaina bastis are referred to in the Korikunda Vishaya. The inscription was found in a ruined Jaina basti at Nonanangala. But it cannot be said that this ruined basti represents one of those mentioned in the inscription since another set of copper plates found in the same ruins refers to a basti in the Mudukottū Vishaya. Bisanahalli, the place of find of the present copper plates, is twelve miles away from Nonanangala. The plates were found buried in the earth there, and may have been buried long back. It is however not possible to say that the plates belong to Bisanahalli itself.

DATE

As usual in the Ganga copper plates only the regnal year of the king with the month and tithi is given. But the dates of the Ganga dynasty are not yet finally settled. They are discussed in the Annual Report for the year 1938, pp 87-88.

Possibly Durvinīta ruled the Ganga kingdom between 605 and 650 A. D. Since the present record belongs to the 4th year of his reign, its date may be somewhere about 609 A. D. or 610 A. D.

HISTORY

The inscription records a grant made by the Ganga king Durvinīta, son of Kongani mahārāja (Avinīta). His predecessors namely, Konganidharma mahārāja, his son Mādhava-mahādhīrāja, his son Hari Varma, his son Vishnugōpa, his son Mādhava dharma mahādhīrāja whose son was Konkani mahārāja are all given the usual epithets qualifying them which have been met with in the other Ganga inscriptions. The present record is mostly identical with Doddaballāpūr 68 (E. C. Vol. IX) and the Gummareddipura plates (M. A. R. 1912) as regards the genealogy and the details about the various kings. But with regard to Durvinīta the details are slightly different from those of his other plates. It is stated in the present record that Durvinīta won great battles against Andari and that he was a worshipper of the feet of Kātyāyini.

In the early inscriptions of Durvinīta, i. e., of his 3rd and 4th regnal years (Bangalore 141, Maddagiri 110 and the present one) he is neither stated to be the son of the dear daughter of Skanda Varma, king of Punnāta (Punnāta-rāja Skanda Varma-priya putrikā janmanā) nor as the ruler of the whole of the Punnāta kingdom (samasta Punnāta pannātādhipatīna). But these facts are mentioned in his later grants, that is, of his 20th regnal year and later (no grant of his has yet been found that could be assigned to the period extending from his 4th to his 20th regnal year). This shows that Skanda Varma of Punnāta might have died without male issues and Durvinīta, being the son of his daughter, might have become the ruler of the Punnāta kingdom also some time between his 4th and 20th regnal years.

Again, in his later grants it is mentioned that he won the battles of Andari, Ālattūr, Porulare, Pernagara and others. This fact is not mentioned in his earlier grants. In the present inscription he is only stated to have won in the battle of Andari (Andariya Prabhūti mahāsvagrāma-labdha-rājashrīyā). It is therefore possible that he might have conquered Andari during the 3rd or 4th year of his reign and won the other battles before his 20th regnal year.

RELIGION

In Maddagiri 110 and Bangalore 141, Durvinīta is stated to be a meditator on the lotus feet of Kamalōdara (Kamalōdara charana kamalānūdhya-tena). In the present grant he is stated to have purified his soul by serving the lotus feet of Kātyāyini (Kātyāyini-charana pankhṛuḥa-paricharana vṛṣudhāntarātmanā). Perhaps the donee Kāpālisarma was a Śākta and the record might be his composition. Durvinīta has not mentioned his family god either in the inscription Doddaballāpūr 685 or in his Gummareddipura grant. In the later Ganga copper plates also no god worshipped by Durvinīta is mentioned. Durvinīta's translation of Vaddakathā into Sanskrit suggests that he had inclination towards Jainism also. His father Avinīta is known to have constructed a number of Jaina bastis and to have made grants to them. But Durvinīta's grants, so far as have been discovered, are all to the Brahmans only. These facts suggest that he was a follower of the Vedic religion and had sympathy towards all the other sects—Śaiva, Vaiṣṇava, Śāktēya and Jaina.

On the whole the present record has enabled us to know more about Durvinīta than has hitherto been known.

The characters, language, etc., of the present grant being comparatively free from faults, the record may be regarded as genuine and of some value for the history of the Gangas.

KANNADA LANGUAGE IN THE GRANT

A few words may be said regarding the last two lines of the present record. They are in the Kannada language and detail the grant made to the engraver. This is important from the linguistic point of view.

There is only one Kannada sentence in the record, but it seems to contain some orthographical mistakes. Instead of mukkanduka (three khandugas) there is mak-kandaka and for mannu (land) there is manu. These might be the engraver's mistakes.

The Halmidi inscription contains more than 80 per cent of Sanskrit words and the style also is more after Sanskrit. In the present record, however, the Kannada sentence contains pure Kannada words (mannu, mane, pālu, pattu, odean). The dative case used here is different from the usual early Kannada form. It is either a or ā according to old grammarians. Instead of ā, attu is used in the present record (mukkandukattu). This is nearer to the Tamil form. There is one such usage by Gunavarman I (C. 900 A. D.) in his Harivamśa which is quoted both by Nāgavarman and Kēsirāja—tanattu billān adanante kīṣuvam.

The word ode-an may also be noted here. Kēsirāja says that prakṛiti and pratyaya must be combined. According to him the word must be odeyan. But in many old inscriptions we find the two parts of the word written separately, e ṇ, mūrvallum in the Halmidi inscription, chhatra chehhaye indāle in Sorab No. 10 (E. C. VIII) the date of which is about 800 A. D., śeṣthe in aludōn in Sorab No. 15 of the same date, etc. Whether it was a mistake committed by the engravers or it was in common use at that time cannot be determined.

Note

This fragmentary inscription records the grant of some land to the god Ankakāri-svaramūḍaya nāyanār. Regarding the date only the cyclic year Ananda and the month Tai are given. The record is not dated in any era. The characters belong to about the 14th century A D. A certain Anka-kā whose full name might probably be Ankakāmundan, is mentioned in line 6. He might have been the donor.

Note

This copper plate inscription consists of 4 plates. Each plate measures $8\frac{3}{4}'' \times 4\frac{1}{2}'' \times \frac{1}{8}''$. There is writing on one side of the first and the last plates. The other two plates are written on both the sides. The ring had not been cut when the plates were received, still one important plate appears to be missing from the set. Either it might have been removed by some one by cutting the plate itself or, by mistake, it might not have been strung at all to the ring. The hole of the last plate is larger than those of others and thus shows signs of being tampered with. 13 lines of writing are found on each side of the plates except on the obverse of the last one where there are only 8 lines of writing. Each line consists of about 32 letters.

The record is engraved in the Old Kannada characters. The letters are finely and deeply cut and clearly formed. The characters resemble those of the Perjjarangi grant published under Yedatore taluk in the present Report.

The engraver of the record is named Viśvakarmāchārya. His title is given thus : Sarva-kalādhāra bhūta Chetvakalābhigñā, learned in architecture which is the foundation of all fine arts. The title shows that he was a great artist. For his work of engraving the record he was granted 4 khandugas of wet land and 2 khandugas of dry land.

Since, unfortunately, an important plate is missing from the record the names of both the donor and the donee are lost, so that it is not possible to assign the record to any king definitely. The first three plates are identical with Perjjarangi plates as already mentioned as regards the genealogy and the details about the various kings up to Śivamāra II. Since the characters are also identical, it is not impossible that these plates also belong to the period of Rāchamalla I. If indeed this were a definite fact, the record would have been very helpful in reconstructing the history of Rāchamalla I since no inscription definitely assignable to his reign has yet been discovered and this record would have supplemented the Perjjarangi plates as regards the details of the reign.

However on the presumption that this grant is of Rāchamalla I, we may assign it to the early part of the 9th century A.D.

For the details about the Ganga history mentioned in this record please see inscription No 31 of the present report.

Note.

This inscription records the grant of some land of the sowing capacity of 15 kolagas below the tank of Jommapura in the Tumburaguttanād, to Kantivodeyar of Kalyedēvanapura by Dayenayakka, son of Murāri Hiriya Harigenayakka. Who these Murāri Hiriya Harigenāyaka and Kantivodeyar were cannot be determined. They are not met with so far in any of the inscriptions. Probably Kantivodeyar was a Viraśaiva guru of that place Dayenayakka does not appear to have belonged either to the Chitaldrug or the Haratī line of chiefs. He might have been a petty local chieftain.

The details of the date given in the grant are Parīdhāvi sam Jēshtha ha 5. No Saka era is mentioned. The characters appear to belong to the beginning of the 17th century A.D. and Parīdhāvi may correspond to 1612 A.D. If that is so, the date of the inscription would be 8th June 1612 A.D.

mine of titles, a lord and an abode of good qualities

Lines 9—22

[Prose] Thus Of Brahmakshatriya (race), an umbrella to horsemen, a spear to the hearts of the envious enemies is Tippa whose splendour is like that of Vanamālī, a son born to Īśvarāṅka and Virāmbē dēvi a treasure of womanhood Tippannipāla's (wife) Singaradēvi of unequalled character When Tippanna Vodeya took Uchchangi by driving out Gōpālādēva being praised with the title a champion over having attacked Gōpanripa in battle when he took the head of the hostile mandalika

. of Tipparāja, lord over the twelve mandalikas. Of the twelve mandalikas Tippanripāla of the title, a lion to the great poets and philosophers is unequalled and of generous character, a spear to the head of the hostile mandalikas in the battle

Line 22.

In the Śaka year 1283, the year Śārvaṇi, on Wednesday the 13th lunar day of the bright half of Āśvīja :

Lines 23—25

The illustrious mahāmandalēśvara, destroyer of enemy kings, champion over rulers who break their word, a suratāla to Hindu rāyas, lord over the eastern and western oceans, who was like the eldest son of the illustrious Bukkana Vodeya.

Lines 25—31.

The illustrious champion over Khantikāra-rāyas . . . of victorious arms, a help to good fame, the only unequalled Bhima, Katakajagaddala (a menace to the world-army or destroyer of the military world), the incarnation of valour, emperor of Śringārapuri, protector of the mandalas, a lion to the elephants the enemies, an axe in the battle, emperor . . . world wrestler, conqueror of Gōpāla's . . . nagari, champion over the valiant twelve mandalikas, unlying valiant, . . . a beautiful garland, champion over the horsemen of the southern kings, Īśvaradēva Vadeya's good son, a light to his family, Tippanna Vodeya, granted the stone charter to the priests Dāvanna and Chikkajannakalpi in order to perform the holy duty of the god Śrī Janārdana of Seṭṭigana Pāleya thus

Lines 32-46.

One village Chandanahalli in the Manahge nād and one village Horanūrapura in the Mūganād. Thus in those two villages those priests can enjoy the income from rice lands, dry-lands, gardens, houses, kadriguttige, aruṇava, banaguttige and all the rights within the four boundaries. The income of Chandanahalli, 50 gadyānas and of Horanūrapura, 30 gadyānas thus, together 80 gadyānas—in words gadyānas eighty. (In addition to that) wet land in the garden below the channel Tāyahalla from the inner bund of Kēsavanahalli, Karadiya kere and Dēvasadēvarakere of that Dharmasthala. They divide among themselves the wet lands and dry lands within so much of the boundaries. Doing thus every year having enjoyed so much through this order, they will maintain for the god's worship, offering food in two plates
. . . rice in two plates twice a day . . . two cocoanuts, one kattale of arecanut for Friday betel, oil bath on Saturdays and Wednesdays, one on new-moon days and fullmoon days, one haṇa for flower, an oil lamp and a perpetual lamp on Sundays, oil for that lamp, two lamps, in all nine, Pañchapaṇva, Viśēṣhaparya and atisṭhana, one person for waving the lamp, one (parichāraka) attendant, two garland-makers, one piper, one drummer, the livelihood of these six persons in all will be provided. Jannakalpi (and the other temple servants) will divide among themselves in this way those two villages, which, being a presentation to the god, are free of all imposts.

Lines 47-57

If, having eaten of god's sacred land one behaves in an improper way, it becomes a concern for Janārdana. Good fortune to this stone-charter granted in writing by Tippana Vodeyar to the priests for performing in this way the holy duty of the god Janārdana unobstructed, for as long as the Moon and Sun endure. Śrī śrī. Those who give trouble to this dharma or neglect it will incur the sin of molesting their own mothers and sisters, of eating the dog and the donkey, of destroying the agrahāras, of ruining the big tanks and of killing their own fathers, elders, children and cows on the banks of the Ganges whosoever takes away land given by himself or by others will be born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. Between the act of making a gift and that of maintaining the one already made, maintaining is more meritorious than making the gift. By making a gift one goes to Svarga, while by the maintenance of a gift one attains the region from which there is no fall.

Note.

This record has been included in the Epigraphia Carnatica, Vol. V, as Hassan 19. It was not completely and correctly read by Rice. The text has now been thoroughly revised and inserted here with translation and a note.

The inscription records the grant of two villages of the income of 80 gadyānas to provide for the ceremonies of the god Janārdana of Pālya, by Tippāmātya. The villages were made over to the priests, specifying the details and expenditure of each ceremony and the duty of each temple servant. But the letters are very much worn out and lost. Especially the first 10 lines are illegible.

As the record is full of lacunæ it is not possible to know all the details about Tippāmātya. He appears to have been a general in the army of Bukkarāya I, the Vijayanagar ruler. He defeated Gōpālādēva in battle and captured the fort of Uchchangī which afterwards came under the rule of the Vijayanagar empire.

The inscription presents us with the following information about Tippāmātya: His father was Īśvarādēva and his mother Virāmbike. He belonged to the Brahmakshatriya race. His wife was Singaradēvī. He won the title of Champion over by defeating Gōpālādēva of Uchchangī. He seems to have had also the title "a lion to the great poets and philosophers." He grew up in the court of Bukkarāya as if he were Bukkarāya's eldest son. He had a number of titles like ‘ champion over Khantikārarāyas, of victorious arms, a help to good fame, the only unequalled Bhīma, a menace to the world-army, the incarnation of valour, Emperor of Śringārapuri, protector of mandalīkas, a lion to the elephants his enemies, an axe in the battle, a world wrestler, conqueror of Gōpāla's . . . nagari, champion over the twelve mandalīkas, the unlying valiant, a beautiful garland of . . . and champion over Tenkanarāya rāhutas ” This shows that he was a very prominent officer. We do not come across so many of his titles in his other inscriptions.

The villages granted to the priests Dāvanna and Chikkajannakalpi were Chendanahalli in the Manaligenād and Horanūrapura in the Mūganād. The priests were allowed to enjoy the income from rice-lands, dry lands, gardens, houses, kaduguttige, aruvana, banaguttige (income from forest) and all the rights within the four boundaries of these villages. The total income from these two villages was 80 gadyānas—50 from Chendanahalli and 30 from Horanūrapura. Besides this, some land below the channel Tāyahalla seems also to have been granted to them. But the meaning of the lines here is not clear. The details of the ceremonies to be observed for the god are not also clear.

The usual imprecatory verses are found in the end.

The date of the inscription, viz, Ś 1283 Śārvarī sam. Āśvija śu 13, Wednesday, corresponds to Wednesday, 3rd September 1360 A.D.

Tipparasa's brother was Teppada Nāganna. See E.C. VI, Mg 25 where Teppada Nāganna is stated as Īśvaradēva's son. He is referred to in a number of inscriptions. But the details given here are not found elsewhere (see E.C IX, Ht 93, 113, X Chikballapur 63, M.A.R 1936, p 94, 1941 p 146). In an inscription at Chandāpur of Arehalli Hobli Teppada Nāganna is stated to have granted a village in the name of his brother Chandapavodeyar. From this it appears that Tipparasa had two brothers—Teppada Nāganna and Chandapavodeyar, probably this Chandapavodeyar died in his early age.

Translation.

May the four arms of Hari, dark as the clouds, haid with the stroke of the string of Śaṅga (his bow), the pillar of the mantapa the three worlds, protect you

Be it well In the victorious Śālivāhana śaka year 1458, the year Manmatha-being current, on the 12th lunar day of the dark half of Mārggaśira —

While the mahārājādhirāja, rāja-paīamēśvara śrī Virapratāpa śrī Achchutadēva-rāya-mahārāya was ruling in peace and wisdom at the capital Hampeya-Hastinā-vati —

The illustrious mahāmandalēśvara Tirumala-rāja-mahā-arasu's brother-in-law, the illustrious mahāmandalēśvara Ragupatirāja-mahā-arasu, Kempasingaya of Bemaratūr and the ruler of Pakomta, belonging to the matt of Pradyumna Vodeyar (?), granted (some lands) to the god śrī Janārdana of Savanī Pālaya. Details Wet land measuring 8 hanas, beyond Ānihala—so much, we, Gōpinātha Vodeyar, have presented with pouring of water, in Agrahār Gavani Hosahalli of Nāgappa for the ekāntada vesa of the god Janārdana Between making and maintaining a gift, maintenance is more meritorious than making a gift. By making a gift one goes to the Svarga (Heaven), by protecting the one (already made) a man goes to a region from which there is no fall.

Ragupatirāja Vodeyar presented Jiglūr for the daily worship of the god Janārdana. An obscene curse on those who violate the grant of this village and this wet land.

Note.

This is the revised version of the inscription Hassan No 21 The record belongs to the reign of Mahārājādhirāja Rājaparamēśvara śrī Virapratāpa Achyutarāya Mahārāya, the Vijayanagar ruler It records the grant of some lands to the god Janārdana of Savanī Pālaya by Ragupatirāja Vodeyar, brother-in-law (manduna) of the mahāmandalēśvara Tirumalarāja mahā-arasu, Kempasingaya of Bemaratūr and the ruler of Pakomta, as also the grant of the village Jigalūr by Ragupatirāja Vodeyar. All of them together appear to have made the grant.

A matt of Pradyumna Vodeyar is mentioned in the record and the donors appear to have belonged to it. Where the matt was situated, cannot be ascertained. The name suggests that it might have been a matt of the Mādhva sect of Brahmans A different matt of the same sect at Bēlūr is referred to in the Annual Report for 1941 Inscription No. 10

Gōpinātha Vodeyar is said to have granted for the god's ēkāntada vesa a land at Hosahalli agrahāra. Whether this Gōpinātha Vodeyar was an ascetic or a subordinate of Raghupatirāja Vodeyar, cannot be determined. After the usual imprecatory verse it is stated at the end that Raghupatirāja Vodeyar granted Jigīr for the daily worship of the god Janārdana.

Raghupatirāja Vodeyar is stated to have been the son-in-law (aliva) of Tirumalarāja Vodeyar in Bēlūr No 223. In the present record he is stated to be the brother-in-law (maiduna). Raghupatirāja might have been the son of Tirumalarāja's maternal uncle (sōdaraliya) and Tirumalarāja might have married his sister so that he became his maiduna after the marriage.

Raghupatirāja Vodeyar is referred to in E C V, Bēlūr No 223, VI, Cm. No 127 and in M. A. R 1938, p. 109. He appears to have been a ruler in those parts at the time the grant was made.

The date Ś 1458 Manmatha sam. Mārgasira ba. 12 of the record corresponds to Tuesday, 21st December 1535 A. D.

Note.

This is a sannad issued by Krishnarāja Wadiyar III. It is dated Angīrasa sam. Phāl. ba 30 Thursday, in 1813 A. D. corresponding to Thursday the 1st April 1813 A. D. It records the grant of some dry land of the value of 12 varahas to the Rāmēśvara temple at Pālya by the King.

It contains a seal above with the words Śrī Chāmarājavadēra tanūja Krishnarāja Vadēru inscribed in the Dēvanāgarī characters. The first 12 lines of the sannad are in the Urdu script and language. The next 23 lines are in the Marathi language and characters, while the rest is in Kannada. The matter is the same in all the 3 languages. Below the line 39 of the Kannada script is the substance of the grant written in the King's own handwriting testifying to his sanction of the grant. The King has signed the sannad at the end.

The sannad is written on 3 sheets of paper which are attached one to the other. At the beginning of each sheet is the above said seal to the left.

Venkatarao, the Āmil of the Mahārājanadurga Taluk had submitted a petition to the King stating that there was a very ancient temple of the god Rāmēśvara at Mahārājanadurga kasaba which was enjoying the land of the value of 36 varahas and that since the land was taken over by the Government, there was no worship going on. Upon this, the King issued the present sannad recording the grant of some dry land of the value of 12 varahas for the worship and other ceremonies of the temple. The grant was to come into force from Chaitra of the year Śrīmukha. The King was at Nanjangūd when he ordered this grant. The grant was written by Khatta Sūrappa, the Royal accountant.

Mahārājanadurga is 8 miles away from Pālya. During Chikkadēvarāja Vodeyar's time a Pāleyagār was ruling here. Chikkadēvarāja Vodeyar defeated him and annexed the fort to the Mysore Kingdom.

Translation.

Be it well. While the illustrious mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Tribhuvanamalla, capturer of Talkad, Bhujabala Vīra-Ganga, śrī Nārasimhadēva was ruling the kingdom with ever increasing prosperity.

In the Mahādēva temple of Honnapura agrahāra in the Nurgunda nādbelonging to the illustrious mahāpradhāna Śaṃkhara-dandanāyaka, on Friday the first of the bright half of Kārttika in the year Bahudhānya, Surigeya Gangana, born to Bammagāvunda and Benavagāvundi of Kandamangala of Kaivāranād, caused the image of Nandi to be made and installed in front of the god. This charity will continue for as long as the moon, sun and stars endure

Note.

This inscription records the installation of the image of Nandi in front of the god at the Mahādēva (Īśvara) temple at Honnāvāra by Surigeya Gangana, son of Bammagāvunda and Benavagāvundi of Kandamangala in the Kaivāranād Śankaradandanāyaka referred to in the present record appears to have been ruling in those parts at the time of the grant. He is mentioned in E. C Vol. V, Hn. 65 and 66, and is known to have built the Kēśava temple at the same place, Honnāvāra.

The record belongs to the reign of the Hoysala king Narasimha I. The titles Śrīman mahāmandalēśvaram, Tribhuvanamalla, and Talekāduḡonda bhujabala viraganga are applied only to the early Hoysala kings. Especially the title Talekāduḡonda bhujabala Viraganga is mostly applied to Vishnuvardhana and Narasimha I. Śankaradandanāyaka was the mahāpradhāna under Narasimha I.

Bammagāvunda is stated to have belonged to Kaivāranād. Kandamangala is in the present Hoskote Taluk in the Bangalore District. Probably Surigeya Gangana belonging to those parts might have come here and presented the above-mentioned Nandi image to the god.

The record is not dated in the Śaka year. The date given is Friday the 1st of Kārttika in the year Bahudhānya corresponding to Friday, 24th October 1158 A. D. during the reign of Narasimha I

Be it well a support to the whole universe, a resolute
. . . having the monkey flag and the bull crest gave Bālgalchu thus—(The meaning of the rest is not clear)

Note.

This is a fragmentary inscription, with the right portion broken and lost. Among the titles used here are Bhuvanādhāra, Vānaradhvaṇa and Vṛṣhabha lāñchana. Whose titles these are, cannot be determined. In some of the inscriptions found in the Manjarābād Taluk, some Kadamba chiefs are mentioned. Since the Kadambas of Hanagal had the monkey banner, these titles might belong to a branch of the family.

The inscription records the grant of Bālgalchu upon the death of some hero in battle. The exploits of the hero are next described. But as the record is incomplete, the meaning is far from clear.

Some Ganga titles are found in the beginning. The characters appear to belong to about the 10th century A. D. Probably some hero belonging to the later Kadamba dynasty which was subordinate to the Gangas might have died in the battle.

This viragal record is fragmentary as the stone is broken both above and below and portions of the inscription are lost. The king is not named, but the title Bhujabala viraganga Poysa [la dē] varu found in the record may be taken as applying to the Hoysala king Vishnuvardhana. Only the name of the cyclic year Sārvarī is found in the record. The only Sārvarī during Vishnuvardhana's reign fell in 1120 A.D. which appears to be the date of the inscription. The name of the hero who fell in the battle is lost. The record appears to register the grant of some land on the death of the hero.

The inscription gives the name of Golla Sīvaṇṇa who was probably a devotee who visited the temple and got the figures and his name engraved.

The characters seem to belong to about the 17th century A.D.

On the pedestal of the Venkatēśa image in another cell of the prākara at the same temple is engraved this short inscription. It records that the image was installed by one Cheluvappa. The characters appear to belong to about the 18th century A.D. But the image appears to date from about the 11th century A.D. (see page 50 of the Report). It is thus probable that Cheluvappa might have brought the image from some other place and installed it at the temple.

The record belongs to the reign of the Hoysala King Viranarasinga. The date given in the record is Sarvadhārī sam. Vaiśākha Amāvasyē Sukravāra, corresponding to Friday the 5th May 1228 A.D. during the reign of Narasimha II.

 this is he who destroys Vāranāsi and incurs the five great sins of killing tawny cows and Brahmans of that place

Note

This inscription appears to record the grant of some honour called Prabhūtunga to Prabhūtunga Māla by Prabhūtavarīsha Gōvinda The meaning of the inscription is not quite clear as some of the letters are worn out and lost Gōvinda seems to have granted some lands also free of certain taxes The witnesses are named next : Chadurāngaranāyga, Mārasinganayga, Īsarayya, Jayasinga, Ghanatunga gāmunda Chē gāmunda nayga The usual imprecatory sentence is found in the end

Among the Rāshtrakūta princes, Gōvinda III and Gōvinda IV had the title of Prabhūtavarīsha But Gōvinda IV's date is too late for the present inscription We have not met with Gōvinda IV's inscriptions in the Mysore State One of the witnesses in the present inscription, Chadurāngaranayga, seems to be the same as Angara or Angarasinga of the Sorab inscription No 22, who was living at the time of Govinda III It is thus possible that Gōvinda mentioned in the present record is the Rāshtrakūta king Gōvinda III who came to the throne in about Ś 716.

'Prabhūtunga' might be some title like Prabhūtavarīsha and Gōvinda might have conferred this title on Māla who might have been an important officer under him If so, it would mean that Gōvinda bestowed some honour of a very high order on Māla and also granted some lands in addition

Some of the inscriptions of Govinda III are found in the Sorab taluk. In the inscriptions Sb 1, 10 and 542 Gōvinda is given the titles Mahārājādhrāja, Rājāparamēśvara, in Sb 9 he is called Prabhūtavarīsha Śrī Gōindara and in Sb 22 he is Śrī Prithuvīballaha Śrī Jagattunga. But in the present inscription he has the titles : obtainer of the band of five musical instruments, Mahāsāmāntādhīpati and Prabhūta-varisha. Gōvinda III was the most powerful ruler among the Rāshtrakūtas and he could not have been a sāmāntādhīpati. So the title here may indicate that this inscription belongs to his early days when he was still a Yuvarāja. He was a very powerful prince even during his father's reign and his father was ready to abdicate the throne in his favour (Bombay Gazetteer, Vol I, Pt III, p 198). Probably Gōvinda was ruling at Banavāsī as a sāmāntādhīpati under his own father, and he might have granted this honour during that period. If this is so, the date of the present inscription would be earlier than Ś 716 from which year he was the king. It is possible that the date of the inscription is about 790 A D

Note

This inscription is engraved on the top of the epigraph No. 30, noticed in the Mysore Archaeological Report for the year 1925 and assigned to the period of Vishnuvardhana, the Hoysala king. But the present record appears to be of a later date since the characters appear to belong to about the 14th century A.D.

The inscription records some grant made by Kāvisetti, Māchisetti, Ballisetti, Kētiseti and Bittiseti for the offering of light (nandādīvige) to the god Kalideva.

The inscription is carved on a pillar and above the bas-relief figure of a devotee. His name is given in the record as Lakshumana Hebāruva son of Nalapa Hebāruva. He might have caused the mukhamantapa of that temple, or a portion of it. The characters appear to belong to about the 17th century A D.

Note

This nushudhikal record is full of lacunæ in the second band as several letters are quite worn out and have become illegible. Hence it is incomplete. The person upon whose death this stone was set up appears to have been a female as there is the figure of a female devotee in the sitting posture on the second panel.

The inscription begins with the usual verse in praise of Jina-śāsana. Brahma of Tavanidhi is next mentioned as ruling both Sorab and Tavanidhi which are compared to Amarāvati and Alakāvati. This Brahma was a subordinate of Harihara II, the Vijayanagar king. He was ruling Tavanidhi in the second half of the 15th century A D and he is stated to have died by the rite of asceticism in § 1301 (E.C VIII Sb. 196). The present inscription also belongs to about the latter half of the 14th century A D. Tavanidhi is the same as the present Tavanandi in the Sorab Taluk.

Note

This short inscription is engraved on the middle panel of a vīragal which is now kept in a small hut-like temple and is worshipped by the villagers as a Māsti. The vīragal contains well carved and beautiful sculptures of horsemen and foot soldiers, though the figures are now coated with oil and dirt. The inscription consists of only one line and appears to mean 'the place of the action by Sirī Kagi.' Probably the stone was set up on the spot where Sirī Kagi died fighting in a battle.

It is difficult to say who Sirī Kagi was. A Chālukya chief named Śrī Goggi is mentioned in a vīragal at Varuna (P. 114 M.A.R. 1936); his date has been fixed at about 900 A.D. But Sirī Kagi of the present record may not be identical with him as this record is much earlier paleographically.

No date is given in the record. The characters, however, appear to belong to about the 8th century A.D.

Obeisance to Ganādhīpati

In the Śaka year 1380, on Monday the 6th lunar day of the dark half of Vayisākha: Malapa, son of Jadeyagaunda of Chitatti village and disciple of Sōmaidēva Oḍeyar, (who was the) worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Sōmanātha, went to heaven. His wife Bommarasi became sati. Bommarasi's Tammagaunda's grandson. To Bommarasi heaven is the refuge. Good fortune.

Note

This record has been included in the Epigraphia Carnatica, Vol. VIII, as Sorab 81; but there it is full of lacunæ and no transliteration or translation has been published. It is therefore revised and inserted here with translation and a note.

The record is a mastigal inscription and records the death of Bommarasi as sati upon the death of her husband Malapa, son of Jadeyagaunda of Chitatti and disciple of Sōmaidēva Oḍeyar.

The date of the record is Ś 1380 Vai ba 6 Sō. No cyclic year is given. The corresponding English date would be 8th July 1458 A D, but it is a Thursday and not Monday as stated in the record.

Translation.

Victorious is Jināsāsana, which is the sāsana of the lord of the three worlds and is characterised by the highly profound svādvāda

When the illustrious mahāmandalēśvara, punisher of enemy kings, punisher of kings who break their word, Suratāna to Hindurāyas, lord of the east, south and west seas, śrī Harihararāya, son of śrī Vira Bukkarāya was ruling the kingdom. —

Be it well In the victorious Śaka year 1301, the year Kālayukti, on Monday the 3rd lunar day of the dark half of Pusa —

The Aluva mahā-prabhu, prajamechche ganda, head-jewel of the eighteen Kampanas, the sun of mahā-prabhū, Tavanidhi Bomma-gauda, with all the sannya-sana rites, expired and went to svargga

His praises. To Bukkarāya of matchless power, lord over the three oceans, a support of the world . . . having re-extricated the earthly merits by uniting them firmly with the Jaina customs, Bommana, lord of Tavanidhi, firm as Mēru, the very form of virtue attained good fame. Brahma, lord of Tavanidhi, a Jaina who has taken an oath not to bow to the wives and gods of others and who says "I bow to the supreme Jina with devotion and to none else," has Jina firmly in his mind. With the accomplishment of having Jina in mind he is a destroyer of cupid, the Jaina ascetic Pārisvasēna is his guru, Śāntinātha his father, Pālakabbe (his mother?), Jainas his relatives and no others such is this Tavanidhi Brahma of good character, an ardent Jaina, lord of the dame of fame. Of a good family, a beloved to his wives, a hero, an ocean of rectitude, an ornament, an increaser of the ocean the Jaina community, lord of the dame of fame, an ascetic in purity, a brother to servant-maids, harlots and others' wives—thus Śānta's son Brahma distinguished himself in the world. The famous Pārisvasēna-bhattāraka is his teacher, śrī Jinēndra his family god, Tavanidhi his native place, Śānta his father, Chiyakka his mother and Bommale of sweet voice and of good family his wife who is equal to this Brahma in this world?

Note

Only the first 14 lines of this inscription had been published in E C VIII as Sb. 196. The record is now completely read and published here with translation and a note.

The inscription records the death, by the rite of sanyasana, of Bommana, ruler of Tavanidhi. Bommana is highly praised here. He was a subordinate of Harihara II, the Vijayanagar king. His parents were Śānta and Chiyakka and his wife was Bommale who is also known to have died by the same rite of sanyasana in Ś 1293. (see E C. Vol VIII, Sorab 199). Bommana's guru was Pārisvasēna bhattāraka. Among the Jaina gurus there are a number of Pārisvasēna bhattāras (E C VII Sh 4, 64, VIII Sb 125, 262, Nr 42, XI Hk 1, 2, etc). But they all appear to belong to earlier periods. Who the Pārisvasēna bhattāraka of the present inscription was, cannot be determined.

Bommana's titles were the illustrious Aluvamahāprabhu, Prajamechheganda, head jewel of the eighteen kampanas and the sun of Mahāprabhus. He is stated to have been ruling Sorab along with Tavanidhi in an inscription at Sorab (see No 50 of this Report). His presence at a meeting held at Banavāsī by the gaudapraja of the 18 kampanas of Gutti is recorded in an inscription at Banavāsī (M.A.R. 1929, Inscription No 113).

The date of the inscription is Ś 1301, Kālayukti sam. Pushya ba 3 Sō. But Ś 1301 is Siddhārthi, not Kālayukti. If we take Siddhārthi, the date corresponds to Monday 26th Dec 1379 A.D.

Translation

While the illustrious mahāmandalēśvara, shears to the neck of the enemy kings, a sun to the Adiyas, worshipper of the feet of the god Billēśvara, conqueror of the hostile army, Vira Bīrarasā was ruling the Banavāsī kingdom in peace — warrior Kāḷeya having pierced in the battle field . . .
When Kāḷagauda fell in the battle smitten by fierce weapons-- sword, karkkade, spear and lance, the celestial nymphs affectionately took him away to their city amidst the sound of the bugle With mirror, festoon, fly-flap, group of damsels, vimāna, music, band, dancing, light and garland of mandāra (flower), the group of gods took Kāḷagauda away with joy.

Note.

This is a vīraḡal inscription in which most of the letters in lines 2 to 8 are quite worn out and lost

The inscription describes the exploits and death of a warrior named Kāleya in some battle, during the reign of the illustrious mahāmandalēśvara Vīra Bīrarasa, shears to the necks of the enemy kings, a sun to the Adiyas, worshipper of the feet of the god Bīlēsvara and conqueror of the hostile army. Evidently Bīrarasa is the Śāntara king or feudatory. Several inscriptions of his reign are found in the neighbourhood

The record is not dated. It may belong to the earlier half of the 13th century¹A. D.

Note.

This record is on a small lamp-pillar in front of the village. It appears to record the grant of the lamp pillar for the Kārtikōtsava (to burn the light during the month Kārtika) by Nirvānappa. It is difficult to say who this Nirvānappa was. One Nirvāṇayya, uncle of the Keladi chief Sōmasēkhara Nāyaka II, is referred to in a number of inscriptions (see E. C. VIII, Tl 6, 87, 183 and 184 and also M. A. R. 1933, p. 199). He appears to have possessed considerable influence with the Keladi chief. Whether the Nirvāṇappa of the record is identical with him cannot be determined. The characters belong to about the 17th century A. D.

Note

This inscription stone, as reported by the local people, was in a Virāṣaiva matt near by. Recently when the matt caught fire by accident, the inscription stone was damaged by the heat of the fire and was thus placed in front of the small Chaudi temple where it is now found. As it is, the inscription is effaced on all the sides and is very fragmentary.

The inscription appears to belong to the reign of Pratāpa Virūpākṣharāya, king of Vijayanagar, who ruled between 1467 and 1478 A.D. One Mahāprabhu Kēśava . . . is also mentioned in the record who appears to have been Virūpākṣharāya's subordinate.

Though the inscription was dated, both the Saka year and the name of the cyclic year are lost and only the tithi Vayisākha ba 3 and the week day Budhavāra are remaining. So it is not possible to know the exact date. The characters as well as the name Pratāpa Virūpākṣharāya found in the record indicate that the inscription belongs to the latter half of the 15th century A.D.

The inscription records the death of some gauda (whose name is lost) and his wives. Some titles are found in the second band of the viragal like . . . dalara ganda and Tenkana salaga. Whose titles these are cannot be determined.

(His) eldest son . . . rivanta Bīran pattigam . . . with his son, Āychayya's wife Arasabbe caused the temple to be constructed

III Stone—

Āychayya gāvunda of Sasagavalli was a gōsāsa. By washing the feet, granted lands to Amrīttarasi Mudiga engraved the letters. Good fortune.

Note

This record is engraved on 3 stones set up in a line. The first stone has the figure of a chakra, the second has an elephant while the third has a kalāṣa flanked by two birds having their beaks in it. Below the figures is engraved the inscription. The third stone has in addition the figure of a plough in the middle of the inscription. The left portion of the second stone is broken and lost, and hence the record is incomplete.

This record belongs to the reign of Satyāśraya (circa 997-1009 A.D.) who is given the titles Akālavarshadēva, favourite of earth and fortune, mahārājādhurāja and Paramabhattachāraka. Bhīvarasa is stated to have been ruling Banavāsī 12000. He is referred to in various inscriptions ranging in date from 997 to 1013 (E. C., Vol. VII, Sk. 71, 179, Vol. VIII Sb 385 and 387)

Āychayya is next introduced. Whether he was the nālgāvunda is not clear as the second stone is incomplete. One Āyayya is referred to in Sk. 287 of Ś 933. Perhaps he is the same as the Āychayya gāvunda of the present record.

The present inscription states that Āychayya was a gōsāsa (gōsāsamiḍam). But what exactly is meant by the word gōsāsa is not clear. The word appears in a number of inscriptions of the 10th century and before. In many of them the word is gōsāsa and is an attribute (E. C. Vol. VII, Sk. 44, 45, 61, 283, Vol. VIII, Sb. 15;

M.A.R. 1929, No 27. Dāyamagōsāsī, Pruthivīgōsāsī, Bhīmagōsāsī, etc.). In all of these it may either mean one who owns a thousand cows (one who has given away in charity a thousand cows ?—gōsahasrī) or one who fights in defence of the cows (gōsāhasī). Sk 9 (E.C Vol VII) seems to record the grant of some land on the death of one Lōkaya in defence of the cows (Lōkayana parōkshadā gōsāsī bhūmī). The present record and the Pattadakal inscription (Ind Ant., Vol. XI, p. 125—Bādi Poddīyembol uttama gōsāsāsamīdol, etc) have the words gōsāsāsamīdam. II (or ir) means 'to be'. But the meaning of the word gōsāsa is still not clear. Ranna also uses this word in his Ajṭapurāṇa (Gōsāsāsamallade kannegōsāsāsamīla).

Aychayya, his wife Arasabbe and his son together appear to have caused the construction of a temple and to have granted some land to Amirttarāsi. According to the inscription Sk. 287, Aychayya or Āyayya had a son by name Kappimayya and a daughter by name Jannabe. Amirttarāsi might have been a Kālāmukha priest.

Regarding the date of the inscription, the name of the month is lost. Ś 923 Plava corresponds to 1001-1002 A.D. and in that year Bahula Pañchami occurs on a Thursday, only in the month Māgha which might be the month that had been mentioned in the inscription. In this case the date would correspond to Thursday, 5th February 1002 A. D.

Note.

This is a vīragal grant recording the death of Gōpara Kēta of Śrīvola in a cattle raid. On this occasion Bōchagauda granted 18 (or 15 ?) kammas of land. The word hadmetu is used either for hadimentu (eighteen) or for hadinaidu (fifteen). Bhāva Kētanna set up the stone in memory of the hero.

Lines 10—15

Be it well after washing the feet of Bhāvaśiva bhalāra, disciple of the illustrious Kēśava pandita, possessed of the qualities of restraint, discipline, study, meditation, control of the senses, silence, dutifulness, silent prayer and absorption, Nalleyachāryar (?) bestowed with pouring of water, to be respected by all, in the land to the north of Śirivolalu, below Bellagola, south of Bendeyakere (and) east of the Gāvunda's gift land (kodāge) and measured by the pole of the gadimba of kachchhavi free of all taxes, one mattar of wet land.

Lines 15—24

Gaudapandita, the āchārya of Jagadēkamallēśvara in the capital Balligāve and Rō(Kā ?)vagāvunda of Śirivolalu will protect this charity for as long as the moon, sun and stars endure. Whoever protects this charity will incur the merit of giving away a thousand cows with their horns and hoofs inlaid with five precious stones to thousand Brahmans deeply versed in the Vēdas at the sacred places Gaye, Gange and Vāranāsi. He who destroys this charity will have incurred the sin of killing the same number of cows and Brahmans in the same places Verse. He who takes away the land given by himself or others is born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years "This bridge of dharma is common to all the kings and should be protected by you from time to time" Thus does Rāmachandra beseech again and again of all future rulers

Note

About 12 lines at the beginning of this inscription are illegible since the top portion of the slab is peeled off. The name of the king in whose reign the grant was made is not clear. Only the letters ka malla are left in the record which indicate the name Bhuvanaikamalla. Bhuvanaikamalla Sōmēśvara was ruling the Chālukya kingdom between 1068-1076 A.D. and the inscription appears to belong to the last year of his reign. The name of his subordinate who is stated to have been governing [Banavāsi] 12000 and the whole of Kāsavala is also lost.

The present record registers the grant of one mattar of wet land in the village Śirivolal (same as Śirālakoppa where the inscription is found) by Nalleyāchāryyar, (?) after washing the feet of Bhāvaśivabhālāra for the service of the god Siddhēśvara set up to the south of Bendeyakere. The land appears to have been purchased from the Gauda Pandita of Piriyamatha at Balligāve.

The date of the record, Ś 998 Nala sam Pushya śu 13 Ādityavāra, corresponds to Sunday, 11th December 1076 A. D.

. Bent well In the victorious Śālivāhana śaka year 1612, the year Pramōdūta, on the 15th lunar day of the bright half of Vayisāka.—

We, Bōle-Narasapa nāyaka of Belagāvatti, have granted one dry land, as a grant to the god Śiva, to the matt of the ascetic of Viattitōta.

Protection of a gift made by another is twice as meritorious as making a gift oneself By taking away another's gift, one's own gift becomes useless.

Sri Rāmā Rangadhāmā.

Note

This inscription records the grant of some land to the matt of the ascetic of Virattitōta by Bōle Narasapa Nāyaka, ruler of Belagavattu. The date Ś 1612, Promōdūta sam Vai śu. 15 corresponds to Monday, 12th May 1690 A.D

Dr. R. Sama Sastri has assigned dates to the members of the Belagutti Arasu family in the Mythic Society Journal for 1923, page 758, on the basis of the Kadire Rāyara Pūrvanittānta (Ori Libr MSS KA 126). These dates require revision in the light of the evidence of this lithic record

Translation.

Om Obeisance to Śiva The people unhesitatingly praise Īśvaradēva, the Sun in the sky of the Sinda-kula, king Malla's son, firm as (the mount) Mandara, protector of the learned, of the Phanirāja-vamśa, a bee at the lotus feet of Mukunda.

Be it well When, with all the titles, the illustrious mahāmandalēśvara Īśvaradēvarasa, Heggade Singayya and anichchhata Gandavigraha Kēśavadēva were in Belagavatti, ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom in the Śaka year 1088, the year Vyaya, on Sunday the 13th lunar day of the dark half of Bhādrapada

With a great army (composed of cavalry, footmen, archers, lakhkham, and vaggasēne), having from many sides surrounded, besieged and climbed the fort of Belagavatti and having attacked and pierced Bahgauda in battle, pleased the celestial dames. With sword, having destroyed the army in the battle . . . is it a multitude of headless bodies ? a heap of intestines ? . . . when , son of . . .
gavuda died, his son Bammaya, Sivayya, Jikayya caused the stone to be erected

Note

The record is full of lacunæ as a number of letters in each line of the 2nd band have worn out and have been lost It belongs to the reign of the Sinda king Īśvaradēva I (circa 1166-1180), son of Mallanipāla Heggade Singayya and Gandavigraha Kēśavadēva seem to have been the officers under him

The date of the inscription is Ś 1088, Vyaya sam. Bhādrapada ba. 13 Ādi. corresponding to Thursday, 25th August 1168 A. D. if the ādhika Bhādrapada is taken, or Friday the 23rd September 1168 A.D if the nija Bhādrapada is taken Either way the week day is not Sunday as stated in the record.

The inscription records the exploits and death of a hero named Mallagauda in some battle probably against Balagauda.

Translation.

Be it well On Tuesday the newmoon day of the dark half of Māgha in the year Paridhāvi, the 55th year of the illustrious Chālukya Vikrama era —

Bīrayya, son of Honnaya of Soradi agrahāra, in order to fulfil the oath, by deed and words, in respect of some duty towards god, entered the fire and went to the world of Śiva Kanna gāvanda of Belagavatti set up the stone Good fortune.

Note.

This inscription stone has the usual sculptures of a vīragal. The first panel from below has the figure of the hero seated with folded hands, probably to fulfil some vow he had taken. In the middle panel, the celestial nymphs are taking the hero to svarga, while in the third the hero is worshipping the linga. The letters of the inscription are worn out and could be read with great difficulty

The inscription records the self-sacrifice of Bīrayya, son of Honnaya of Soradi agrahāra, by entering fire. The reason for this sacrifice is not clear. He appears to have taken some oath of observing some dēvavesa (god's duty) and in fulfilment of that vow he might have sacrificed himself.

The record is dated in the 55th year of the Chālukya Vikrama era. The details of dating are Paridhāvi sam Māgha ba Amāvāsye Mangalavāra, corresponding to Tuesday, 7th February 1133 A D

Pemmma Kētayya, (servant) of Dāsara, the chieftain of the illustrious Ballave-nād, attacked in the fight ? (polege) for Nelavatti, fought and died. Good fortune

Note.

This short inscription records the death of Pemmma Kētayya, servant of Dāsara, the chieftain of Ballavenād, while fighting. The meaning of the word pole in the inscription is not clear Dāsara appears to be the same as Dāsarasa who is mentioned in E. C. VII, Hl. 47 as a subordinate of the later Kadamba chief Taila. The latter died in the year 1130 A.D. The characters of the present record appear to belong to this period.

Note.

This record is incomplete as many words are lost in it owing to a number of letters having become quite worn out and illegible. The record begins from the second band and ends on the first.

The inscription records the death of Samgeyanāyaka in some battle. Samgeyanāyaka appears to have accompanied diya of Yaraganād, protector of refugees and destroyer of enemies, in an expedition against Honnūranād where he died fighting. This is an instance of a viragal set up in the birth-place of a hero.

The date of the record is Ś 1318 Dhātu sam Māga sū. 4, corresponding to Wednesday, 3rd January 1397 A. D.

Dēvarasa of Sangerenād, the village accountant (sēnabōva) composed the inscription, while Chandōja, son of Būchōja, engraved it.

Malligaunda, the village headman, the village accountant, the goldsmith Nilanna and the carpenter Padumara together granted the land where the stone is set up, to the architect Ningōja for his having constructed the Vijayārāmēśvara temple. The donors appear to have granted the land to some mutt also. The record is not dated, but the characters appear to belong to about the 18th century A. D. Note

This is another vīragal inscription which records the death of a warrior named Turabagauda in the battle against Malapa The meaning of the inscription, however, is not quite clear Turabagauda appears to have been the Dannāyaka of Jannarasa Vodeyar of Āraga who was a subordinate of Harihara II (E C VIII, Tl 31).

The record belongs to the reign of Harihara II, the Vijayanagar king, who is praised as śrī rājādhirāja, rājaparamēśvara, lord over the four oceans, champion over those rulers who break their word, and champion over the three rāyas

The date of the record is Ś 1314, Vishu sam Śrā. su 10 Bu Ś 1314 is, however, Āṅṇasa Apparently it is a mistake for Ś 1323 which corresponds to the cyclic year Vishu Taking the latter year, the date corresponds to Wednesday, 20th July 1401 A.D

A Kariyagauda is mentioned in the inscription. His relationship either with Turabagauda or with Jannarasa Vodeyar cannot be determined.

The stone was set up by Hādīya Harige-nāyaka, the father of the hero, while it was made by Dēvōja, son of Muddōja.

Note.

This is a sannad granted by Krishnarāja Wadiyar III of Mysore to Bhakshi Bhīma Rao of the Huzur Sawar Kachēri in recognition of the able and distinguished services rendered by the latter to the British and Mysore Governments. It bears the Mahārāja's signature and seal at the top and, excepting for the lines 51 to 57 which are written in the king's own handwriting in the Kannada language and characters, is in the Marathi characters and language. At the end of the sannad occurs again the signature of the Mahārāja in Kannada.

The sannad is dated 14th October 1818 A D and the corresponding date of the Hindu calendar is also given. It records the grant of seven asali villages and two dakhle villages to Bhakshi Bhīma Rao and his descendants in perpetuity with all the rights of ownership, that is with powers to sell, pledge, etc.

Some details about the character and achievements of Bhakshi Bhīma Rao are also recorded in the sannad. It is said that he was despatched in charge of the Mysore Horse to help the English in Hindustan and that he acquitted himself so well that the Mysore sircar gained great fame. It is further said that on his safe return with the conquering troops, this grant was made in consideration of his being a trustworthy and faithful officer, of noble descent, a well wisher of the Mysore Government and a promoter of its prosperity and greatness.

A stone inscription on a slab in the verandah of the Mārī shrine at Hattavāl, Nanjangūd taluk, (M. A. R. 1940, p 183, No. 49) records the gift of the village of Hattavāl as inām kodage by the Mahārāja Krishnarāja Wadiyar III to Bhakshi Bhīma Rao on October 13, 1818 A D. The officer is also referred to in M. A. R. 1912, pp. 61-62, as having made certain gifts to the Śrīkanthēśvara temple at Nanjangūd.

Translation.

In the Śaka year 935, the year Pramādīcha, on Monday the tenth lunar day of the bright half of Āshādhā, Mākabbeganti (died) Bichagavuda of Madiba set up the nusidhige stone as parōksha-vinaya (in her memory)

Note

This is a nishadhi stone set up in memory of a certain Mākabbeganti by Bichagavuda. No other details about Mākabbeganti are given. The date of the record Ś 935 Pramādīcha sam Āshādhā śu 10 Sō. corresponds to 21st June 1013 A.D., a Sunday and not Monday as stated in the record. If we take the solar month Karkātaka for Āshādhā, the date corresponds to 20th July 1013, a Monday. Instead of the lunar months the solar months are given in some inscriptions of the western part of the Mysore state. The same may be the case here also and hence the latter date seems to be the date of the present inscription.

Translation

Lines 1—9.

Be it well. Success through the adorable Padmanābha, resembling (in colour) the cloudless sky.

A sun illumining the clear firmament of the Jāhnavī-kula, possessed of strength and valour from the great pillar of stone divided with a single stroke of his sword, adorned with the ornament of a wound received in cutting down the hosts of his cruel enemies, of the Kānvāyanasa-gōtra, was sīmat Konganivaromma-dharma-mahādhīrājah.

His son, inheriting the qualities of his father, possessing a character for learning and modesty, having obtained the honours of the kingdom only for the sake of the good government of his subjects, a touchstone for (testing gold) the learned and poets, skilled among those who expound and practise the science of politics, author of a commentary on Dattaka's aphorism, was śrīman Mādhava-mahādhīrājah

His son, uniting the qualities of his father and grand-father, having entered into war with many elephants (so that) his fame had tasted the waters of the four oceans, was śrīmad Harivaromma-mahādhīrājah.

Lines 9—15.

His son, devoted to the worship of the twice-born, gurus and gods, meditating on the feet of Nārāyana, was śrīman Vishnugōpa-mahādhīrājah.

His son, whose head was purified by the pollen from the lotuses, the feet of Tryambaka, having by personal strength and valour purchased his kingdom, daily eager to extricate the ox of merit from the thick mire of the Kali-yuga in which it had sunk, was śrīman Mādhava-mahādhīrājāh.

His son, the beloved sister's son of Krishnavarmma mahādhīrājāh,—who was the sun in the firmament of the Kadamba-kula,—his mind illumined with the increase of learning and modesty, of indomitable bravery, reckoned the first among the learned, was śrīman Kongani-mahādhīrāja, named Avinīta

Lines 15—22.

His son, having the three powers of increase, who had brought anxiety to the face of Yama on account of the smallness of the residue left after the countless animals offered to him as a tribute (namely) the brave men consumed in the sacrifice of the face of the many wars waged for Andari, Ālattūr, Porulāre, Pelnagara and other places, author of a commentary on fifteenth Saṅga of the Kirātārjunīya was named Durvvinīta.

His son, the lotuses of whose feet were yellow with the swarming bees the lines of the crowns of savage kings rubbing against one another, was named Mushkara

His son, of a pure wisdom acquired from his being the abode of fourteen branches of learning, distinguished for his skill among those who teach and practise the science of politics in all its branches, a rising sun in dispersing the clouds of darkness his enemies, had the celebrated name Śrīvikrama

Lines 22—30.

His son, whose broad chest bore on itself the token of victory in the shining scars of wounds received in many battles inflicted by the tusks of huge elephants darting like lightning, possessed of the essence of all the sciences, having gained the three objects of worldly pursuit, of virtuous life and daily increasing glory, was named Bhūvikrama. Who, moreover, had conquered the Pallavēndra king in a terrible battle in the place named Vilanda trodden to dust by the feet of a hundred elephants maddened with streams of blood issuing from the door of the breasts of warriors forced open by all manner of weapons, called the Rāja Śrīvallabha, in the enjoyment of fortune obtained by victory in a hundred fights

His younger brother, whose feet were irradiated with the brilliance of the myriad jewel suns in the diadems of the great kings bending down before him, the self-chosen lord of Lakshmi, was named Nava-Kāma, beloved by the good sushta-priyāḥ, his fame in destroying the hosts of his enemies being the theme of song.

Lines 30—44.

Of that Kongani-mahārāja whose other name was Śivamāia, the grand son, the groups of the toes of whose feet were illuminated with a rainbow light from the rays of the numerous jewels set in the bands of the crowns of prostrate kings; who had fixed his faith on Nārāyana, raging with fury in the front of war horrid with the assault of horses, heroes, men and elephants; terrific in anger (or Bhīmakōpah); no less a captivator of the glances of young women, the most skilled in the joyful art of love than a subduer of the world, laden with spoils of victory gained in many most arduous wars, a lion to the herd of elephants the hostile kings, a lion among kings (or Rājākēsari). Moreover, a sun greatly illumining the clear firmament of the Ganga race, a terror to hostile kings, a protector of the fortunate ways of good men, having obtained a good kingdom, a king of superior qualities among all kings, ever victorious, is the Rāja Śrīpuruṣa, a head jewel among princes. To women, a Kāma (Cupid), in the use of the bow, the son of Daśaratha (Rāma), in valour, the son of Jamadagni (Paraśurāma), in great wealth, Balāni (Indra); in great glory, Ravi (the sun), in government by himself, Dhanēśa (Kubēra), of a mighty and splendid energy, the benefactor of all things living, whom the poets daily praise as the creator Brahma. He, also, the middle of whose palace echoed the sounds of the holy ceremonies which accompanied his daily rich gifts,—was Śrīpuruṣa, the first so named Prithuvī-Konguni-Mahādhīrājah.

His son, the chaplets on the crowns of all the kings bowing down to his glory caressing his two lotus feet; the sharp bright sword in his arm embraced by the goddess of victory on pulling down his enemy the king Vallabha with its band, the pillar his arm streaked red with the drops of blood oozing from the temples of the elephants of opposing hostile kings split open in the front of battle; having his enemies overthrown with showers of arrows from his bent bow drawn back to his ear, the sky filled with hundreds of banners won by victory in war, a king who on his becoming angry the hostile kings go in a moment into the mouth of Antaka (Yama), horrid to behold, filled with twining entrails and streams of blood, lighting up also the ten cardinal points with the glory of his fame as unspotted as the rays of the moon, distinguished by all the marks of an emperor, desirous only of benefiting others without seeking any benefit for himself; having by his administration of justice rooted out the evil practices of the Kali-age, his skill in the practice of politics putting to shame Brihaspati, his character like a stone pillar for the support of dharma destroyed by the myriad deceits of the host of evil kings, the world of the twice-born gratified with his constant bestowal of gifts, whose donations by absence of divided desires and by benefiting all the world, exceeded the pouring forth of water by the regent elephants. Moreover, placed in the world of endless calamities like twisted top-knots, supporter of the fine arts, friend of the learned, able in protecting, the birth place of pure qualities; a guide of kings; famous as a poet; skilled in poetry; having seen to the farthest shore of the Phaṇṣuta-mata difficult to understand; of firm intellect which was a touchstone in the science of logic; his insight into the essence of the management of elephants sāma-ya-tantra lowered the pride of the learned; of profound knowledge in expounding the system of the great yati born from the mouth of the female elephant (hastinī-vakrōdbhava-yati pravaramata); far-seeing in discussing the new enquiries into many subjects proposed by the learned, perfect in the system he had adopted for the management of horses; a sun in causing to unfold the lotus garden the science of archery, author of a treatise on his own system of the treatment of elephants (gajamata); of no mean intellect; builder of an ornamental bridge, gratifier of the circle of the learned, skilled in all matters connected with the drama, its combinations and branches, by his unequalled form surpassing Makaradhvaja (the god of love), his head purified by prostration at the lotus feet of Makaradhvaja's guru (or father, Vishnu), of distinguished fame from victory over the Vallabha army, supported by the Rāshtrakūta, Chālukya, Haihaya and other brave leaders, who had encamped at the village named Mudugundūr Dhōra's (?) cavalry (Dhōraśvīyam) the most powerful in the region, which had spread over all quarters, he conquered by the showers of innumerable sharp arrows discharged by his arm this king of exceeding glory, (dispersing them) like the sun with his invincible rays dispersing the darkness, certain to rise, secure in his own sphere He, too, who, like Hari, was ever revered by Dvijapati (Brahmans, otherwise Garuda); like the sun, duly rising daily, like the world of serpents, free from fear (otherwise, birds), like Ātmākara, without spots, though Duryyōdhana (or a strenuous fighter) yet rejoicing in the qualities of Arjuna, though the ocean (otherwise, master of armies), not a refuge for water (otherwise, fools); though the moon (otherwise, of patient disposition) not united with spots (otherwise, faults). By the ornaments of the Rāshtrakūta and Pallava lines, the crowned kings named Gōvindarāja and Nandivarmā, was he anointed to the kingdom, they with their own hands binding the crown on his brow,—the sun to the clear firmament of the renowned Ganga line, Konguni-mahārājādhirāja paramēśvara śrī Śivamāradēva

His younger brother's son was Rājamalla whose arms were engaged in destroying the prosperity of hostile kings and whose feet were bright with the edges of the lapis lazuli gems in the ornamental bands of the crowns of (tributary) kings Rising like the moon, full of splendour cool rays (hands cool to touch), and shining digits (learning) and illumining the sky of his own kingdom which had been overcast by the darkness of the night of the Rāshtrakūta, he drew to himself by the force of arms the great goddess of his kingdom who had been dwelling in the abodes of his enemies and along with her he also took with him the damsel of fame.

Lines 83—87.

Further, he made the quarters bright with the stream of his fame which spread like the rays of the moon shining brightly in the sky after the season of clouds had expired. He was (like a) great caravan merchant skilled in making marches across impenetrable forests of difficulties. He was a Mandara mountain churning the ocean of the army of the enemies equipped with elephants full of ichor. He was a sun in the firmament the Ganga race. He was a mass of prowess.

Lines 88—95

Also. The streams of blood jutting out from the body of a great warrior whose head has been severed by the sword of the king (Rājamalla) appeared like the tongues of flame of his anger. He was tightly embraced, as it were, by the goddess of royal power attached to him by the assemblage of his good qualities. Greed did not dare even to look at him as if afraid of his terrible prowess. Like Brahma he dwelt in Kamala (lotus flower; the goddess of wealth served him). Like the sun he prospered every day with rising brightness and burnt with the bright rays of his prowess the mass of mountains (whose wings were lost) the hostile kings. Like Lakshmana he brought joy to Sumitrā (good friends) and was skilled in following Rāma (good women). Like Bharata he was a companion of Śatrughna (he had ministers who killed enemies). Like Abhimanyu he delighted Subhadrā (good people). Like summer he was devoid of sins (the nights were declining). Like the rainy season he removed dust (curbed his passions). Like the autumnal season (śarat) he shone with the assemblage of great swans (kings).

Lines 95—97

His fierce enemies had to suffer rough handling at his hands like the breasts of newly married damsels.

Lines 97—101

He was a Śankara (god beneficent) but not the destroyer of Daksha's sacrifices (not a destroyer of sacrifices made by competent persons). Though he was Mars (delighter of the earth) he was not a cruel planet (kind in his dealings). Though he was a royal sage he defeated Viśvāmitra (conquered the enemies of the earth). He was the abode of the gems his great fame but how was he not a receptacle of poison (water)? He was a mass of great brilliance and yet how could he be an assemblage of lotuses (bestower of wealth)? Ever pleasant to the eyes and dear how could he be a mass of terrible heat (great glory)? How could he cause delight to flowers (good people or the learned men)? All this is strange.

Lines 101—111

By him, Satyavākya. Konganivarma-dharma-mahārājādhirāja-paramēśvara. Permānadi, deeply versed in the teachings of Chānakya, with a clear insight into the Nītiśāstra (Science of Polity), a great seer (who can look into the past, present and future), purified by contemplating on the feet of Viṣṇu (lit. adorned with Kaustubha) was granted free of all imposts, for the increase of the merit and fame of his parents and of himself, the village named Perjjarangi, situated in Edediṇḍe

Seventy in Marugare-vishaya at the time of the solar eclipse which has the power to remove all the sins of Kālī, in the first year of his prosperous reign, seven-hundred and forty-one years having expired (in the Śāka era) to the auspicious Nāgadēva-bhatta, deeply versed in the R̥g Vēda, his mind being solely bent on doing good to others, engaged in serving the gods and Brahmins, son of Tadangutti Sōmayāji-bhatta, skilled in the performance of all sacrifices, ever tasting the Sōma juice, and grandson of Bhattavineyadī who was a lamp to the Bhāradvāja lineage.

Lines 111—121.

Its boundaries are thus determined.—North-eastern boundary, the extreme southern end of Gāma-gudda tank—the eastern boundary, the extreme western end of the goldsmith's tank at some distance comes the eastern corner of Sigege tank, then the edge of the washermen's tank then the banyan tree, then the canal from the Māhakāra tank then the western end of Vaikōnta tank. then the southern end of Tōndigere tank then at some distance the southern end of Nidugatti then Sinnapāshāna boulder and near it the Great Banyan tree. then the southern end of Nokkigere then the southern end of Tēnandākagere then Pihyāl, then the western portion of Sirikkagarega tank then the boundary of the three villages formed by the Aśvattha tree then the southern end of Nallūr tank then the southern part of Madavadi tank then the southern part of Komara tank. then the tamarind tree named Mahāmadhu. thus is it bounded

Lines 121—130

The witnesses to this gift are the subjects of the Ninety-six Thousand Province.

He who either out of greed or infatuation seizes this will be guilty of the five great sins: he who protects this will acquire merit. The following are the verses of Manu relating to this.—He who confiscates his own gift of land or land gifted by others will be born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. It is very difficult to make a gift and it is also difficult to protect another's gift. Between making a gift and protection of another's gift, protection is more meritorious than making a gift. The earth is enjoyed by several kings beginning with Sagara. Whosoever is the ruler of the land at a time will get the merit of the gift of that land. The property of the Brahmins is a terrible poison (if seized). Poison is (really) no poison. Poison kills only one person, while the property of Brahmins kills its illegal enjoyer with his sons and grandsons.

The plot of wet land of the sowing capacity of 4 khandugas of paddy and the kangu land? of the sowing capacity of 2 khandugas should also be protected like gifts made to Brahmins.

This śāsana is written by Viśvakarmāchārya, an authority for all arts and versed in the fine arts.

Note.

This is a copperplate grant consisting of 7 plates, each measuring $8\frac{1}{2}'' \times 5''$ and a ring, $4\frac{1}{2}''$ in diameter, bearing the seal of an elephant. The seal is oval in shape and measures $2'' \times 1\frac{1}{2}''$. The edges of each plate have raised rims in order to protect the characters in the plates. The plates seem to have been buried in the earth for a very long time and were very rusty when received in the office. The last plate has no writing. Of the remaining plates, the first has writing on one side only while the others are written on both the sides. 12 lines of writing are found on each surface of the plates except on the back surface of the 6th plate where there are only 10 lines. Each line consists from 28 to 34 letters. The ring had not been cut at the time the plates were received.

Description.

The grant is engraved in Old Kannada characters. The letters are well formed.

Paleography

They are deeply and finely cut. The characters belong to the early 9th century A.D. and resemble the alphabet of the Manne plates (M.A.R. 1910, p. 24) and Nelamangala 60 (E.C. IX). The test letters bha, la, ra, ka, ja all belong to that period. Some orthographical mistakes are found in the plates. (IIa. L. 1, IIIa. LL. 5, 7, etc.) Instead of Uvadhmanya, ra is duplicated with pa and ra (Ib. L. 7, 10). The front surface of the 6th plate has a number of mistakes.

The language is Sanskrit throughout and is written in a grand champu style with prose and verse. In many places alpaprānas are written for mahāprānas, short vowels for long vowels and ra for re. In plate V a, hathēna is written for hathēna. But these and such other mistakes may be due to the carelessness of the engraver. The language is generally correct, though the orthography is bad.

The grant is stated to have been engraved by Viśvakarmāchārya, an authority on all arts and versed in the fine arts. The name Viśva-karmāchārya appears in many Ganga grants (M.A.R. 1910, p. 24; E.C. VI, M. 36; E.C. IX, Nl. 60 of the date 797 A.D. and E.C. XII, Nj. 269 of 904 A.D.) In Mūdagere 36, the engraver is sarva-kālāntarpātī chitrakalābhigñā Viśvakarmāchārya. This inscription belongs to the time of Śrīpuruṣa and its date is about 750 A.D. The date of the present grant is 819 A.D. The name Viśvakarmāchārya may have been the family name and may have come down from father to son. Mr. R. Narasimhachar says that it appears to have been the usual title of the court engraver (M.A.R. 1907, p. 20).

Are the engravers of the present grant, the Dāvangere plates of the present report No. 34, the Jāvali plates and the Manne plates one and the same? The characters of all these four plates resemble one another and the name Viśvakarmāchārya occurs in all of them. If this is so, we have to say that Viśvakarmāchārya lived for a long time.

For the work of engraving the plates, the scribe was granted 4 khandugas of wet land and 2 khandugas of grain (Kangu) land. It is also requested that the grant be protected as a grant to the Brahmans.

The record registers the gift of the village Perjjarangi belonging to Edeḍinde 70 in Marugere Viśhaya, free of all imposts by the Ganga king Rāchamalla in his first regnal year for the increase of his merit. The donee was Nāgaḍēvabhatta, grandson of Bhatta Vinaya and son of Tadangutti Sōmayāpi of Bharaḍvāja gōtra. He was well-versed in R̥gveda, was engaged in doing good to others and was a worshipper of gods and Brahmans. His father, skilled in the performance of sacrifices, was ever tasting the Sōma juice.

The village Perjjarangi which was granted is stated to have been in Edeḍinde 70 of Marugere Viśhaya. The boundaries of the village are also given. Marugere Viśhaya is referred to in some other inscriptions also. In an inscription at Hirigundugal Marugere nādu is referred to as ruled by Siyagella during the reign of the Ganga king Śrīpurusha. An inscription at Srīgēri (M.A.R. 1916, p. 44) and the Mallonahalli copper plate grant of Avinīta, also mention Marugere Viśhaya. But it is difficult to identify the place. The vīragals at Hirigundugal indicate that the village was a place where some important battle was fought. The Ganga king Śivamāra died there while fighting with the Rāshtrakūtas (M.A.R. 1910, p. 24), and the reference to Marugere Viśhaya in one of the lithic records there indicates that Hirigundugal might have belonged to Marugere Viśhaya. In the present record the boundaries of the village given are mostly tanks. There are a number of tanks around Hirigundugal. So Perjjarangi might have been in those parts. But no village mentioned in the grant is found in that taluk now.

No other details of the date are given except that there was solar eclipse on the day the grant was made. In Ś 741 the solar eclipse occurred only on the new-moon day of the dark half of Āshāḍha which corresponds to Sunday, 26th June 819 A.D. This might have been the date intended in the grant.

No grant of the Ganga king Rāchamalla I had so far been discovered and the present one is thus the first copper plate grant which can definitely be assigned to him. His name, of course, had appeared in some vīragals. The Manne copper plates published in M.A.R. 1910, p. 24, belong to a Rāchamalla who is supposed to be the Western Ganga king Rāchamalla I by Mr. R. Narasimhachar. But the Rāchamalla of the Manne plates seems to be different from Rāchamalla I of the famous Ganga lineage, because the genealogy given in the Manne plates is quite different from the usual Ganga genealogy found in many Ganga grants. The present record on the other hand gives the regular Ganga genealogy of the known genuine Ganga copper plates. As regards the date also the present grant differs from the Manne plates. While the present grant gives Ś 741 as the first regnal year of the king Rāchamalla, the Manne plates give Ś 750 as the 12th regnal year, which can only be the 9th regnal year according to the present grant. It is not possible to make up this difference of 3 years. Again the Sanskrit language of the Manne plates is very corrupt, while that of the present grant has comparatively few errors. Thus we can leave off the Manne grant either as a forgery or as belonging to some other Ganga prince of the same name.

History.

These plates of Rāchamalla closely resemble Nelamangala 60 of E. C. IX and Yedatore 60 of E. C. IV regarding the genealogy and the details relating to the kings up to Śivamāra. Konguni Varmma, his son Mādhava, his son Harivaromma, his son Vishnugōpa, his son Mādhava, his son Avinita, his son Durvinita, his son Mushkara, his son Śrīvikrama, his son Bhūvikrama or Śrīvallabha, his brother Śivamāra, his grandson Śrīpurusha and his son Śivamāra are all given the usual epithets as in the abovementioned plates.

With regard to Rāchamalla the present inscription gives the following details. His arms were engaged in destroying the prosperity of hostile kings, his feet were bright with the edges of the lapis lazuli gems in the ornamental bands of the crowns of tributary kings, he drew to himself the great goddess of his kingdom who had been dwelling in the abode of his enemies (i e., the Rāshtrakūtas) and along with her he also took with him the damsel of fame, he made the quarters bright with the stream of his fame, he was (like a great caravan merchant) skilled in making marches across impenetrable forests of difficulties, he was a Mandara mountain churning the ocean of the army of the enemies equipped with elephants full of ichor and he was a sun in the firmament the Ganga race.

Rāchamalla is Śivamāra II's younger brother's son and his father is not named in this record. But we know from other sources that his father was Vijayāditya (see Kudalūr plates of Mārasimha, M. A. R. 1921). In Vallimalai inscription (E. I. Vol. IV, p. 140) which belongs to Rāchamalla himself his father is stated to be Ranavikrama which seems to be the title of Vijayāditya. In an inscription at Kondajji agrahāra also one Ranavikrama is stated to have granted some land during the reign of Śrīpurusha. This Ranavikrama also might be identical with Vijayāditya. Śivamāra had a son by name Mārasimha who granted some land in A.D. 897 (Manne plates). But the fact that Rāchamalla succeeded Śivamāra to the throne indicates that both Vijayāditya and Mārasimha might have died before Śivamāra and that Śivamāra had no other male issues to succeed him.

There was constant war between the Gangas and the Rāshtrakūtas during the reign of Śivamāra. Śivamāra was twice imprisoned by the Rāshtrakūtas and reduced to the galling position of a feudatory. To regain independence appears to have been the one object next to his heart and in his persistent attempt to achieve it he nobly sacrificed himself (M A R 1910, p. 24). Rāchamalla seems to have succeeded Śivamāra on the throne with the main object of fulfilling his uncle's ambition of liberating the Ganga kingdom from the clutches of the Rāshtrakūtas. To his good fortune the Rāshtrakūta sovereign Gōvinda III, a terror to the Gangas, had died by the time of his accession to the throne and immediately, during the very first year of his reign, Rāchamalla seems to have declared independence, which fact is mentioned in the present grant.

Translation

Be it well. In the year 1564 of the victorious Śālivāhana era, the year Chitrabhānu, on Monday the full moon day of the bright half of Vaiśākha, when it was Chitta constellation —

For the worship of the god Gōpālakrishnasvāmi and for feeding in the matt of the illustrious paramahansa parivrājakāchārya, Vaishnava-siddhānta-pratishthāpanāchārya, worshipper of the lotus-feet of the god Rāmachandīa, padavākya-pranāna-pāivāra-pārīna, sarva-tantra-svatantra, lord of the throne of learning (Vidyā-simhāsana) of Vyāsarāya, the illustrious Vyāsarāya —

Mudduvīrappa-Nāyaka and sri Tirumla-Nāyaka, sons of Muddu-Krishnappa-Nāyaka and grandsons of mahārāja, rājamānya rājē sri Viśvanātha-Nāyaka of Kāsyapa-gōtra, ruler of the kingdom of earth.

In our kingdom, Madhura Sima, we have ordered the grant of Ayyūr (the boundaries of which are given in detail) with wet and dry lands, māvada maravada (?) gardens, streamlet, water, tree and stone, on this auspicious day, for the offering of food for the god Gōpālakrishnasvāmi in the matt of the illustrious Vyāsarāyasvāmi with gold and pouring of water. Therefore this can be enjoyed by sons and grandsons in succession till the moon and sun endure. Thus we, Mahārāja rāja-mānya rājēsri akhanda mandalādhisvaia, sri Tirumala Nāyaka, have given this dāna sāsana with gold and water in writing.

The witnesses to this sāsana : Saundara rājasvāmi Mīnākshī, Sundarēśvara, sun, moon, sky, Vāmi and Bhūdēvi. We have given in writing this grant of village. Thus written by Rāmanāsāli. Whoever destroys this charity will incur the sin of killing a cow in Kāśī and of killing Brahmins in Dhanushkōti.

Note

This single copper plate record received from the Vyāsarāya matt of Sōsale refers to the gift of a village called Ayyūr in Madhura sīma to the god Gōpālakrishna in the matt of the illustrious parama-hansa parivrājakāchārya, Vaishnava-siddhānta-pratishthāpanāchārya, worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Rāmachandra, pada-vākya-pranāna-pāivāra-pārīna, sarva tantiasvatantia, lord of the throne of learning (Vidyā-simhāsana) of Vyāsarāya, the illustrious Vyāsarāya. The svāmi is not named and is called merely Vyāsarāya. The donor is the chief of Madhura named Tirumala nāyaka son of Muddukrishnappa and grandson of Viśvanātha. Mudduvīrappa mentioned in the grant is the elder brother of Tirumalanāyaka. Tirumalanāyaka ruled the Madhura kingdom between 1623 and 1659 A.D. (Historical inscriptions of Southern India, p 364)

The date is given as ś 1564 Chitrabhānu sam. Vai śu Purnima Chitta nakshatra and Induvāsara, corresponding to 4th May 1642, a Wednesday and not Monday as stated in the record The constellation too does not agree. It is Viśākha and not Chitta Chitta occurs on Monday the 13th lunar day corresponding to Monday 2nd May 1642 which might be the date of the record

There is no signature of the donor in the end.

Translation

To the chief of ascetics named Vidyāvallabha, possessed of great glory and seated on the throne of the great Vyāsēndra, for the worship of (the gods) Krishna and Rāma, the auspicious Pūrṇaprabhu (Purnaiya) presented this excellent gold mantapa (pavilion) on the 6th lunar day of the bright half of Māgha in the year Vibhava.

Note

This records the gift of the gold mantapa in the Vyāsarāya mutt at Sōsale by Dewan Purnaiya who was governing the Mysore State during the minority of the king Kṛṣṇnarāja Vodeyar III from 1799 to 1811 A.D. The gift is stated to have been made at Seringapatam where Pūrṇaiya was residing, for the worship of the gods Krishna and Rāma. Of the images of these gods, the Krishna or Gōpālakrishna image first came into the possession of the mutt during the time of its great guru Vyāsa-tīrtha. Rāma or Pattābhirāma or Rāmachandradēvaru has been worshipped in the mutt since the days of Madhvāchārya, the founder of the Dvaita system.

Vidyāvallabhasvāmī, the donee, was an ascetic guru of the Vyāsarāya mutt whom the Mysore king Kṛṣṇnarāja Vodeyar III later invited to the Mysore State from Kumbhakōnam and built a mutt for him at Sōsale and presented numerous jewels to the deities worshipped in the mutt.

The date of the presentation of the gold mantapa is given as Vibhava sam. Māgha śu 6 and corresponds to Saturday, 21st January 1809 A.D. taking the only year Vibhava occurring during the period when Pūrṇaiya was the Dewan.

Contents and Remarks

Appears to record the grant of some honour called Prabhūtunga to Prabhūtunga Māla by Prabhūtavarisha Gōvinda, in addition to some lands free of certain taxes

Registers the grant of the village Pennaūr in the Korikunda-vishaya by the Ganga king Durvinīta to Kāpālśarma, son of Agniśarma Registers the gift of the village Perjjaingi belonging to Edeḍinde 70 in Marugere vishaya by the Ganga king Rāchamalla to Nāgadēva bhatta, grandson of Bhatta Vinaya and son of Tadangutti Sōmayāḷi.

Since an important plate is missing from the record, the names of both the donor and the donee are lost, so that it is not possible to assign the record to any king. The first three plates give the Ganga genealogy up to Śivamāra II.

Appears to record the death of a hero in a battle between the armies of Tailapa and Pañchala dēva. Pañchala dēva was a subordinate of Mārasinga, the Ganga king.

Appears to record the death of Bhuvanāditya, son of Poletālva and the setting up of the stone in his memory by Biyyal, concubine of śrī Permādi.

Records the grant of Bālgalchu upon the death of some hero, probably belonging to the later Kadamba dynasty which was subordinate to the Gangas.

See above under Gangas.

See above under Gangas.
